SHOWMANSHIP & SELLING

THE old arts die hard. "Opera at Movie Prices" is a newspaper headline of the week. It is likely to prove as impractical as some of the unhappy efforts that have been made to sell movies at opera prices. All interestingly relating to our frequent observation that the motion picture must ever continue to be the best show in the world for the price, and our occasional observation that the occasional motion picture can present the best show in the world, at any price.

There is, here and now, the best opportunity for the re-establishment of the motion picture habit with the amusement buying public that has been presented since the birth of the nickelodeon, which swept across the land on a steady upward curve right across and through the "stringency" of 1907. Nickels and dimes counted in those days, too.

With the whole mercantile world dealing in food, furniture, textiles and whatnot, advertising, advertising and screaming, about current values, it would seem that there might be profitable opportunity for the retailers of motion pictures to point out now and then that the box office has its bargains, too. Is it not just possible that, despite the flourish of its publicity efforts, the motion picture is these days somewhat under-sold?

And speaking of selling, there's something a bit heart-warming about the reports of the progress across the country of Warner's "Forty-second Street" Special train, which is turning out the folk to go "down to the depot" by the thousands—and more importantly, to go thence to the theatre to see what it all may be about. And there is Metro's "Studio Train," their big national ballyhoo, which is, like the Warner special, now bearing down on Washington to get into the limelight of the nation's attention, turned toward the inaugural excitements.

These are activities of showmanship, whoope-te-doo showmanship, that the mob likes, which is the only showmanship that can do us much good in these days when the motion picture has the problem of selling the millions.

"Coming, coming, coming!" That's a great word in the circus business, and it can be in the world of the motion picture, too. The public can well be jarred out of the notion that the movie show is always down at the corner at the Lyric. There's more profit in the notion that a new show is coming to town every little while.

NEWSPAPER SPEED

WHILE we are thinking about the fine-haired technique of the motion pictures, its optics and sounds, we can spare a glance of admiration for what is being achieved by newspaper makers. In the course of an address before the Advertising Club of the New York Times the other night, Mr. Henry Wise Wood, a master of press design, remarked upon some aspects of newspaper printing, relating that: a sheet of newsprint is three one-thousandths of an inch thick, that a halftone cut has a relief depth of five one-thousandths of an inch, that it has to deposit one ten-thousandth of an inch of ink on the paper while it is running through at the rate of thirty miles an hour, or four one-thousandths of a second per agate line! Incidentally Mr. Wood has evolved a device for feeding new rolls of paper to the press without stopping, making a paste joint or overlap in just one-seventieth of a second, hot or cold.

"LOU" IN LIEU OF "LIL"

A GREAT triumph for the cause of righteousness is to be recorded in that current bagnio success, "She Done Him Wrong." On the stage Miss Mae West had the role of "Diamond Lil" but it is entirely purified for the screen by translation into "Lady Lou." What a gorgeous and typical victory!

GERMAN sound engineers, who have not been entirely pleased with our unit of noise, the decibel, have evolved their own, calling it the "phon". A "phon" is a degree of sound which is just barely perceptible. The scale runs up to a hundred "phon", which is the point where the sound creates a sensation of pain. We have heard stage whispers which did that.

AND now we make note that last Sunday was the tenth anniversary of Mr. Charles Picquet's Carolina Theatre at Pinehurst, where that genial showman made a happy landing in a peach orchard fifteen years ago, after a road career that began with song and tambourine up in the Canadian hinterland and led across the continent. He has been president of the Theatre Owners Association of the Carolinas for eight years.

MR. MEL G. LAWTON, Roundtabler, with the Prince Edward Theatre in Sydney, observes to our Colonel Charles E. Lewis that the Australian exhibitor-distributor controversies are about to deliver the whole industry of the antipodes to the government, and "once the government starts to interfere in the business one never knows where it will end." And that's true on both sides of the world.

JUST cheerfully to remember there was once a lot of money somewhere, we are pleased to set down that once upon a time Mr. Stuart W. Webb, Boston banker, now president of Pathe Exchange, Inc., offered Edsel Ford one billion dollars, ($1,000,000,000.00) for the Ford Motor Company. Young Mr. Ford's reply was "Gosh! What would anybody do with all that money?" It's a fair guess he could think of several things now.

INTO THE RANKS OF MOTION PICTURE exhibitors this week came one Henry Ford, someway connected with the manufacture of automobiles in the state of Michigan. Thus it came about: when Mr. Ford acquired control of Detroit's major Guardian Trust Company, he automatically acquired control of the Paramount theatre, owned by Guardian. 17 MILLION RADIO RECEIVING SETS COMPETING WITH FILM THEATRES

Nine Million Receivers Sold Between April, 1930, and January, 1933, an Increase of 40 Per Cent, CBS Shows

Seventeen million homes now possess receiving sets, sales reports of radio manufacturers show, indicating the extent of the possibilities of radio's new competitive challenge to motion picture theatres as a purveyor of entertainment to the American public.

Nine million receiving sets were sold between April, 1930, and January, 1933. Approximately 4,760,000 were sold to homes which did not previously possess a set.

In the issue of February 11 MOTION PICTURE HERALD published details of the current movement whereby radio broadcasting of headline performers is making severe inroads on box-office receipts. Exhibitors everywhere are complaining vehemently against competition.

Economic conditions and unemployment were pointed to as the basic influencing factors which are keeping millions of prospective theatregoers at home nightly listening to commercial broadcasts by a score of air headliners.

The large circuit-distributors are producing pictures starring radio headliners in an attempt to meet the competition, and theatre owners in many territories are tuning in on broadcasts, bringing programs to their patrons in the lobbies, and, in the cases of the more popular artists, they are hooking their theatre sound amplification systems to radios.

An investigation, which is said to show for the first time the proportion of radio sets sold to homes not previously owning sets, and the percentage sold as replacement for worn-out receivers, was completed last week by Columbia Broadcasting System, William Paley, president, with the cooperation of five leading manufacturers, 738 radio dealers and distributors, and McGraw-Hill Publishing Company.

The statistics, gathered from the confidential sales records of radio manufacturers and distributors by states and territories, show that set ownership has increased as much as 140 per cent in sections of the country which revealed a low volume of sets in proportion to population when the Government compiled the last national census in 1930.

The investigation shows a total of 16,809,562 homes possessing receivers, as compared with 12,000,000 in the Government's 1930 report.

While total radio ownership in the country at large has increased 40 per cent since 1930, it has increased by as little as 20 per cent. in such states as Michigan and Iowa, where it was already high in proportion to population, but by as much as 140 per cent in such states as Florida and Louisiana, where it was low in 1930.

Nine states in the southeast showed an increase in the number of radio homes from 484,404 to 992,304 between April, 1930, and January, 1933. Four states in the Southwest increased set ownership from 409,021 to 656,021 in the same period. In the Northeast, where the percentage has been high, ownership mounted from 8,340,539 to 11,392,139.

Motion picture theatres in rural sections are principally affected by the competition of radio broadcasting, although the prolonged economic depression in the industrial centers is also taking a heavy toll.

The five manufacturers who placed their confidential records at the disposal of the statisticians who conducted the recent investigation, represent 60 per cent of total radio sales in the period covered. Their records provided a cross-section of nationwide sales.

The 17,000,000 radio receiving sets indicate that more than half of the country's 30,000,000 families tune in at home for at least part of their entertainment..

FILMS GET A BREAK AS CONGRESS ADJOURNS WITHOUT ONE ATTACK

Scores of Lame Ducks Hobble from Legislative Arena Without a Quack, Though Lankford Did Seek Regulation

by FRANCIS L. BURT

Washington Correspondent

The film industry finally got a break.

A three-months' session of Congress has just come to an end without an attack upon the motion picture business, a single bill for an investigation, without a single demand for a prosecution.

Scores of members of Congress who were badly treated in the November elections served through their final three months without once taking advantage of the opportunity to denounce, scathingly and with gestures, the makers of motion pictures.

Except for the reintroduction of his bill for creation of a department of General Welfare, which would take over the film and radio industries for the supposed general good of the general public, William C. (Lame Duck) Lankford of Georgia maintained a dignified silence throughout the session on the subject of motion pictures.

Block Booking Legislation Out

Block booking legislation was abandoned with much other legislation jettisoned by the retirement to private life of Smith Wildman (Lame Duck) Brookhart, of Iowa.

Copyright legislation was temporarily placed aside (with care, for resurrection in the next Congress) by Representative William I. Sirovich of New York, whose efforts last session to modernize House procedure by holding hearings first and writing legislation later, instead of the other way round, cost the Government considerable money for additional hearings and for new drafts of his bill, which never was fully acceptable to his own committee.

The New York surgeon-playwright will be with us next session, having been reelected—an accomplishment of no mean proportions last November.

Mr. Blanton of Texas, whose membership on the House District of Columbia committee has brought him to the fore in the consideration of blue law legislation for the national capital and of similar matters, also will continue to add to the expense of printing the Congressional Record.

With nothing to its credit except the passage of the resolution to repeal the prohibition amendment and the enactment of some appropriation bills for the Government departments, the final session of the 72d Congress is passing into history, leaving to its successor the special session expected to convene in April, a heavy burden of legislation looking toward the restoration of prosperity.

Sales Tax Agitation Expected

One of the first matters expected to come before the new Congress will be taxation, the revenue law of 1932 having failed dismally to effect the promised balancing of the budget. Faced with the cold fact that existing tax rates can be increased but little, if at all—the admission tax is returning only about half the revenue anticipated and probably would return less if increased—it is expected that the sales tax will be revived to receive more sympathetic consideration than was given it a year ago.

Bankruptcy law changes, sought during the session, will also come up for consideration. This legislation contemplates the salvaging of going businesses, in preference to the waste accompanying the liquidation of assets in bankruptcy, by providing for the composition and extension of individual indebtedness and the reorganization of corporations unable to meet their obligations as they mature.

Also facing the special session are a host of other matters, including amendment of the anti-trust laws to permit action now which in happier times would be considered restrictive of free competition.

Spottiswoode Aitken, veteran motion picture character actor, died last week in Hollywood at the age of 64. Starting his stage career at the age of 13 in England, Mr. Aitken appeared in England and the United States in varied Shakespearean roles.

His initial motion picture appearance was in the East, in 1907. Funeral services were held on Tuesday in Hollywood. Two daughters, Frances and Shirley, of Hollywood, and Frank S. Aitken, an aviator, survive.

Court Dismisses Quittner Action

Judge Francis G. Caffey, in New York federal court, late last week dismissed the monopoly suit instituted by Joseph Quittner, Middletown, N. Y., exhibitor, against Paramount-Publix, other distributors and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and asking damages which under the triple damage clause of the Clayton anti-trust act, would have aggregated $5,100,000. The trial had been carried on for 12 weeks, numerous executives having testified.

Judge Caffey, in his ruling, declared that free and active competition existed among distributors in selling, that evidence was lacking that the construction by Publix of the Paramount at Middletown was the result of a conspiracy, and that even though a statutory violation were to be assumed, there was no basis for determining the amount of damages suffered by the plaintiff in the action.

The complaint had charged that Publix had erected a Middletown theatre when Mr. Quittner refused to contract for Paramount pictures at the distributor's terms. Following construction, the complaint charged, the plaintiff was unable to obtain the best product for his two Middletown houses, which subsequently were foreclosed.

Warner Refutes Goldwyn's Blast

Jack L. Warner, vice president in charge of Warner production on the Coast, last week returned shot for shot in a heated refutation of statements emphatically criticising the present production system, made by Samuel Goldwyn a few days before in a New York interview.

"I will pay Goldwyn his own salary to sit in our office one week, provided he finds that any of his allegations are true at our studios," Mr. Warner was quoted as saying. "There is no necessity for changing the present production system," he said, "but it is necessary to apply business methods to changing conditions.

"Goldwyn's allegations may be true in some instances, but he should not classify every producer in one general blanket indictment when he talks of extravagance, waste and incompetence. We have drastically reduced production costs, we have no one on the payroll who is just collecting salary, we do not force stars into roles not fitted for them.

"In answer to Goldwyn's charge that we should make only 10 or 12 pictures a year," Mr. Warner continued, "I point to the box-office figures that show we make that many every three months that are hits."

WHEN THE MUSIC TELLS THE STORY

Cumulative Effect Achieved by Correlating Music, Dialogue and Action in 'Hallelujah, I'm a Bum'

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

Several more or less fruitful years have passed since Mr. Al Jolson first made the audible screen say "Mammy," thus giving melodic articulation to a hitherto mute cinema, lyrical transcription to things designed to entertain, uplift or divert.

Since that eventful day the screen has been the forum for an assortment of tonal outbursts that have had little relation to the intelligent coalition of pictorial and musical elements. The sentimentalists, sophisticates and musical wisecrackers have been "off agin, on agin" with the moguls of production in Hollywood, according to whether or not the latest "musical" clicked in the cinema palaces, while a few serious workers in the musical media have been pursuing their way unheralded and unsung, contributing some constructive material as they go along. That these earnest music-makers have not accomplished something that might be termed a distinct departure from conventional methods, is probably due to the fact that the overlords of production do not "speak their language."

Hence, we have the anomaly of a Broadway team of lyricist-composer adventuring into a field that is at least unique to the American screen, where more serious musical talent has feared to tread. In that quaintly titled production "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum," the enterprising unit of Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart, with the connivance of Mr. Jolson and Director Lewis Milestone, has made the experiment of corelating music, dialogue and action in a manner and on a scale hitherto unattempted in American-made pictures. In that respect, it is at least novel if not entirely original; for what they term "rhythmic dialogue" is one of the elementary devices of the lyric stage, and foreign screen productions, such as "Congress Dances," "Zwei Hertzen in Drei Viertel Takt," "Le Million," "Schubert's Fruehlinstraum" and others have utilized dialogue and music in this manner with excellent results. The general method of musical treatment in the synchronization of action in "Hallelujah" also stems back to the musical traditions of the silent screen, more recently to Chaplin's "City Lights," both in interpretive and motivating characteristics.

In working out their scheme of rhythmic patter, the lyricist and music writer have, however, succeeded in devising a formula for yielding cumulative effect both in action and music that is peculiarly adaptable to the sound screen. This formula is in evidence many times throughout the picture.

A case in point is the series of sequences that build up the refrain: "Bumper's Found a Grand." When one of the park bums spies Bumper (Jolson) and Acorn (his Negro pal) in the act of picking a thousand dollar bill out of a garbage can, he immediately spreads the report to the various groups of the gang scattered throughout the park. These groups take up the refrain as they trek forth to find Bumper, keeping time to the rhythm of the song as they march along. This musical motivation reaches its climax when the groups foregather and surround Bumper, who then assumes the role of a musical soap-box orator and renders a chanson, addressing his compatriots as "Friends, Rummies, Countrymen, well, anyway, jes' friends; we find a thousand dollars, and friendship ends."

The same musical method is used later on when the report circulates that Bumper is about to commit the crime of going to work. The news of the schism spreads like wildfire and Bumper is again grilled by the hobo gang, and is finally tried in a "kangaroo court" for the "heinous crime of going to work." Worked up to by the cumulative motion device, the trial scene is done in rhythmic patter to tonal background, with a set solo by Bumper justifying his action in taking a job. The proceedings are carried out in a sort of al fresco opera bouffe style that harks back to the methods of those two talented men of the theatre of an older day, Gilbert and Sullivan, who also wrote a "Trial by Jury," as well as "Mikado," "Pinafore," "Pirates of Penzance" and a few other pieces that still show vitality.

It is in this scene that Mr. Jolson lifts up his larynx in a pathological justification, as well as reason for his mania for going to work, to the effect that he had fallen in love.

"I looked into her eyes and went the way of all men," cries Mr. Jolson. "I didn't want to do it, but I'd do it again. I knew a little Bumper (Mr. Jolson) voices this "bum" philosophy to his compatriots of the park when they surround him and demand that he share with them the thousand dollars he has found. This is the climax to a refrain: "Bumper's Found a Grand," which illustrates the cumulative motivating effect of rhythmic patter and music.

Exhibitor Finds Explanation of Losses in Multitude of Depressing Pictures in These Times

by DR. L. D. WHITAKER

Operator of the Eaco Theatre, Farmville, Va.

Dr. L. D. Whitaker, in the accompanying article, bespeaks the experience of fifteen years of intimate association with the motion picture business both as theatre owner and operator. In 1921 he organized the local stock company at Farmville, Va., and built the Eaco theatre. The company, the Educational Amusement Company, operates the Eaco, with William H. Rippard as theatre manager. Dr. Whitaker is president of the corporation. His wide acquaintance in the vicinage, supported by close touch with the students and faculties of the State Teachers College and Hampden-Sydney College, both at Farmville, fits Dr. Whitaker well for the role of interpreter of his community's thoughts on motion pictures. THE EDITOR

In times such as these the great need is diversion from the cares that infest the day. We need to forget our troubles for a while, we need to laugh and see happiness.

It strikes me that the motion picture industry is in a better position to provide this needed diversion than any other force in our country today. Are they doing it? Most emphatically I say they are failing to live up to their opportunities.

For many years I have been connected with the industry as an exhibitor and naturally I have been a close observer of how the public reacts to the various types of pictures. Being in a college town where there are hundreds of students from all over the entire state, I consider that I can get a better idea of just the type of picture that the majority prefers, than can most small town exhibitors.

Prefer Happy Endings

I know it to be a fact that unquestionably the public does prefer pictures that have a happy ending. Thev prefer romance. The ideal pictures to please the public that I recall offhand are such pictures as "Smilin' Through," "The Pagan Love Song" and "Fast Life."

When people go to a show they enjoy living in fairy land. They go to the show to enjoy themselves, to laugh, and when the show is over, to come out with happy faces. People are not helped or properly entertained when the screen keeps presenting tragedy and unhappiness. God knows there is enough tragedy in the every-day life of people. People use alcohol to try and forget their troubles and to feel while under its influence that troubles are fewer and joy more abundant.

A Recital of Tragedy

For the life of me I cannot see why the producers fail to realize that they are seriously hurting the entire industry by the types of pictures they are now presenting to the public for their entertainment. Within the past few months I have seen picture after picture that contained tragedy and unhappiness, and left the audiences leaving the theatre with long faces that gave them the appearance that they were returning from a funeral instead of from what was supposed to be a house of entertainment. When I keep seeing picture after picture of this type, I can easily understand why all of the producers are losing money and having their stocks selling for a few dollars a share.

Many picture patrons appreciate good acting, but they appreciate and enjoy it far more when the story has a happy ending than they do when the story leaves the players unhappy or dead at the end of the picture. Within the past few months, I have seen the following pictures that to me should not have been made or shown while people are downcast and depressed:

"A Bill of Divorcement"—Tragic and depressing ending with daughter and father in sorrow.

"Six Hours to Live"—Hero strangled to death, brought back to life only to die in the end.

"Payment Deferred"—Uncle murders nephew for money, woman commits suicide. Uncle convicted of murdering her. Whole story is very gruesome.

"Men Are Such Fools"—Unfaithful wife and murder of villain. Depressing.

"The Conquerors"—Producers appear to go out of their way to have little boy and likeable doctor killed in train wreck. Son-in-law commits suicide. Heroine dies from excitement when grandson has returned from war.

"Rockabye"—Unsatisfactory ending, leaves audience depressed.

"Call Her Savage"—They had to suffocate a baby in this one.

"If I Had a Million"—They give a man a million and then he is electrocuted just as he gets the money.

"A Farewell to Arms"—Tragic, with the woman having a dead born baby and then dying in her lover's arms.

"Afraid to Talk"—Ending o. k., but too much brutality shown, leaves audience depressed.

"Son-Daughter"—Story of wrong type for Navarro and Helen Hayes. Hero dies, leaving audience unsatisfied.

"Bird of Paradise"—Picture ends with hero delirious and heroine given up to natives to be thrown into burning volcano.

"70,000 Witnesses"—They had one murder and two other persons blown to pieces by an explosion.

"Strange Interlude"—Woman disappointed in love, becomes morbid, then marries, but on account of insanity in husband's family she is afraid to have a child by him. Has child by another man. Husband thinks it his. Child grows up hating his real father—mother and doctor, father of the child, broken hearted. Picture ends with heroine left alone after son marries and the doctor has left her.

Do the producers feel that such pictures have a good psychological effect on those who see them, or are good for the industry as a whole? In my mind it is unquestionable that depressing pictures are very, very bad for anyone connected with the motion picture business.

RCA Victor Develops "Public Address" Device

RCA Victor Company has announced a new portable "public address" system which is claimed to provide improved quality of reproduction, simplicity of operation and carrying convenience, being contained in a single carrying case.

The apparatus was designed, the company says, to fill the requirements of a wide field of application for public address and sound re-enforcement systems. The new "velocity" ribbon microphone is said to be an integral part of the new system. Operation is claimed to be as simple as that of an ordinary radio receiver.

When Music Helps Tell the Story

look would be the finish of me. I didn't want to do it, but I did it, you see."

This is all very affecting to those who are affected that way. It adds what Pooh Bah would term "verisimilitude to an otherwise bald and unconvincing narrative."

Throughout the picture the tonal rhythm and effects "spot" the action with the tenacity of a musical Hawkshaw. When His Honor the Mayor boards the train for New York, the music revels in a realistic and graphic tone-picture of a train getting under way, and continues "keeping time, time, time in a sort of rhythmic rhyme" all during the train scenes. When Bumper siestas under the trees in Central Park there is a veracious twittering of birds from the woodwind section. A hack-driver's horse whinnies and the tonal synchronization accords. Then there is a peculiar clock-like motif for the garbage collector (Langdon) as he pushes his wagon along; and there is also what might be claimed as the original "amnesia motif" when the girl rescued by Bumper is revealed in that strange condition. The musical Hawkshaw has missed none of these details, and it is in their close and apt synchronization to the action that much of the effect of the production is achieved.

This Jolson picture is an interesting and commendable adventure into a field hitherto unexplored by American producers. Incidentally, it demonstrates that by the deft use of music a little pictorial material can be made to go a long way and still retain entertainment values. It is through such experiments as this that the musical screen will be enabled to emerge from its static condition.

Coast Film Board Elects

Charles Muehlman of Warner, was elected president of the San Francisco Film Board of Trade at the recent annual meeting. Barney Rose, Universal, was named vice-president, and Jack Bettencourt, Paramount, secretary-treasurer. The board of governors includes the three officers, G. William Wolf and Oliver Watson. Rowena Foley continues as secretary.

MGM'S TRAVELING STUDIO TO HEAD INAUGURAL PARADE CONTINGENT

Train, Stars and 50 Candidates in Screen Personalities Contest Will Appear in Front Section of Fourth Division at Capital

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has dispatched to Washington an expedition of goodwill from the motion picture industry to the new Administration, which will participate prominently in the historical ceremonies attendant upon the inauguration of Franklin Delano Roosevelt as the thirty-second President of the United States.

Metro's contingent will march in the front section of the fourth division when the long line of the inaugural parade, led by John Joseph Pershing, General of the Armies, swings up Pennsylvania Avenue and then past the reviewing officials on the Capitol steps.

Worldwide Tour to Follow

MGM and its affiliated interests have assembled a 500-piece band from all its theatres in the territory. Featured will be the Hearst-MGM-Globe Trotter traveling motion picture studio, which will carry stars and 50 candidates in the company's local contest for screen personalities. The camera cars and organization advance cars, decorated for the occasion, will follow.

Howard Dietz, director of press relations; Silas Seadler, in charge of advertising; William R. Ferguson, exploitation chief, and Eddie Carrier have been working on the Washington contest for two weeks. It is being staged in conjunction with the Hearst publications and marks the beginning of a round-the-world tour by the traveling studio, which will not terminate until the end of the four-year term of the Roosevelt Administration in 1936.

When the expedition disbands in Washington on Saturday evening, following the inaugural, Metro immediately will start the traveling studio on a tour of this country in connection with a nation-wide exploitation campaign which will be staged for and with exhibitor clients of the corporation. The itinerary of key cities and approximate dates of the arrival of the studio follow: March 10, Baltimore; March 25, Atlantic City; April 5, Philadelphia; April 25, Trenton; May 1, New York; June 1, Bridgeport; June 7, New Haven; June 14, Hartford; June 21, Springfield; June 27, Worcester; July 6, Albany; July 13, Utica; July 17, Syracuse; July 21, Rochester; July 25, Buffalo; August 1, Toronto; August 7, Erie; August 11, Pittsburgh; August 18, Cleveland; August 25, Toledo; August 28, Detroit; September 10, Chicago (three weeks). The studio then will travel westward. Between dates, stopovers will be made at theatres in outlying towns. Specifically, four new releases will be ballyhooed by the studio. These are: "Rasputin and the Empress," with Ethel, John and Lionel Barrymore; "White Sister," with Clark Gable and Helen Hayes; "Today We Live," starring Joan Crawford and Gary Cooper, and "Hell Below," with a cast headed by Robert Montgomery, Jimmy Durante and Walter Huston.

Crew Aids Exhibitors

The Chicago campaign will be conducted in connection with the World's Fair, where, as in other key territories, sales appeal will be directed along general lines on behalf of the company and its trademark and product. As a medium of advertising and a creator of goodwill, the traveling studio train also is intended by Metro as an educational factor, showing, as it does, how sound motion pictures are made and projected. A miniature studio and a standard size Western Electric sound projection booth are installed.

The studio exploitation crew, including special advance men, and headed by Mr. Carrier, cooperate not only with independent accounts but also work for and with affiliated circuits which play Metro product.

The typical program starts off with a thirty-minute screening of institutional shorts relative to the advancement the motion picture industry has made in the last ten years. Stars are shown at work and at play in Culver City studios. Another feature is an announcement, through the studio's amplification system, of forthcoming attractions at the theatre where the particular campaign is being conducted.

Previous to the studio's arrival in town, the advance men arrange a tieup with the Hearst newspaper or another published locally, and a voice and screen opportunity test is conducted.

Arthur Brisbane, Hearst Syndicate writer, paid tribute Tuesday to MGM's new picture, "Gabriel Over the White House" with the following in his column, "Today":

"A moving picture, finished in Hollywood at 4 o'clock this morning in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, will interest millions of Americans and stir up considerable thought. It will interest especially the new President of the United States. . . . The story told in the picture is truly imaginary, but a million Americans will wish for it to come true. . . . People will like it and you want to see it."

New Company Planning 12 Films at Cuban Plant

The Motion Picture Corporation of America, recently formed, plans the production of 12 features and 20 short subjects, designed for the American and European markets, to be produced at Havana, Cuba, where the company plans construction of a studio. W. D. Almazov is vice president and general manager of the company, the main office of which is located at 55 Consulado street, Havana.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

THE EFFORT WHICH usually is expended on the penning of Asides and Interludes, was taken up entirely this week by the reading of Mr. Upton Sinclair's new book about William Fox, who will be remembered as having sold out some years ago. Between its covers there are sufficient asides and more than enough interludes for any one issue.

The frontispiece portrait in sepia was selected specially by Mr. Sinclair "because it gives you the sadness in its subject's face, and lets you see the marks of the conflict." The scars, however, are not discernible—not even through our powerful magnifier.

In the village of Tulchva in Hungary, where Mr. Fox was born, his father ran a general merchandising store. As a sideline, Fox Senior extracted teeth, advertising to the people that he was a painless dentist, and guaranteeing that no one would feel the pain of tooth extraction. The patient would strip to the waist, and, at the crucial moment, someone burned his back with a hot iron. This was so painful that the extraction of the tooth would not be noticed. Mr. Sinclair does not say that young Will helped.

Fox is pictured in the book as a play-safe political student. He is a Republican in national affairs—at least he was until Mr. Roosevelt defeated Mr. Hoover at the polls—and a Democrat in New York City. Now Mrs. Craig Sinclair is trying to induce Mrs. Eve Fox to use her influence on Bill to make him a Socialist. It is interesting to learn that Mr. Fox, as a poor youngster, was a Socialist of the "soap-box" variety, although he did not vote Socialist. When the time came to cast a vote, he was a capitalist and voted Tammany.

Benjamin Reass, personal attorney, is called Mr. Fox's "fidus Achates." He sat in while Fox told his story to self-styled "Father-confessor" Sinclair. Occasionally, Mr. Reass would have a little spat with Mr. Fox, which caused the author to remark, "When these two get into an argument, it is exactly as if they were married. 'Ben, dear!' Mr. Fox exclaims, and the amount of emphasis on the 'dear' is proportioned to the intensity of Fox's irritation."

In the Rivington Street tenement where the Foxes lived, it was the rule, as elsewhere in the neighborhood, that each occupant had to clean and scrub the stairs and hallway of the floor he lived on. The property belonged to a man by the name of Michael, who had a butter and egg store downstairs, and there lies a story of the struggle for existence in the ghetto of New York, as told by Fox:

"Michael had a very fine cat. I knew Michael's cat lived on cheese. When the weekend came, I would like to go on picnics, so I would go down to borrow the cat and say we had mice, which we did not. Later I would go downstairs and say that I had offered the cat some chicken, and that he wouldn't eat it, and I wanted some cheese for the cat. Michael would thereupon cut some nice Swiss cheese for the cat, and I would leave with the cheese but the cat never saw it, because I would take the cheese on my picnic. Then on Monday morning, I would bring Michael's cat back."

Fox tells about the time he transformed a girl called Theodosia Goodman, daughter of a tailor in Cincinnati, who had no theatrical experience, into Theda Bara, "special importation" from Arabia. Bara is Arab spelt backwards. He started her off at $75 a week and when her contract expired he was paying her $4,000 weekly.

THE LUCKY FOX SAVES $14,000,000

On Friday morning, October 25th, 1929, William Fox had $20,000,000 worth of stocks of corporations other than those that he controlled. Thirteen brokers were handling the accounts. By the following Monday afternoon, Fox had disposed of all these securities on a hunch that all was not well in the stock market. The big crash came the next morning. When the bell rang in the New York Stock Exchange at 10 o'clock on Tuesday, the value of the $20,000,000 worth of stocks had been reduced to $6,000,000. Mr. Fox told Upton Sinclair that had he not acted on his impulse, "not only would my companies have been embarrassed, but I would have been a bankrupt."

Hero, or no hero, Mr. Sinclair in his new book about Mr. Fox blames Fox "and all the other big bankers" who followed his example in selling out, with bringing on the panic. Sinclair whitewashed the incident with the remark, "But such is the world we live in."

THERE are several sides in the book to Mr. Fox. Page 334 presents him as a philanthropist. It seems that W. F. went to Edward Tinker last year when Mr. Tinker was president of the Fox corporations. They had two lengthy conferences which were arranged by a mutual friend. The subject of the discussions was a plan which Fox claimed would successfully effect a reorganization. When they got down to business it appeared that the plan was to return Mr. Fox to the Fox corporations. He wanted $25,000,000 from the Chase people for doing a job. Said Fox:

"I informed him that I had wanted $15,000,000 to get out" (and he got it), "and I wanted $25,000,000 to come back."

"I frankly told him," Fox continued, "that my doing of this work was wholly objected to by Mrs. Fox. . . . I told him that in spite of her contention, I would like to do this job, complete it successfully, and thus write the closing chapter of my story."

When Mr. Fox was only 15, Mr. Sinclair said he foreshadowed the great captain of industry, a class which, ordinarily, Mr. Sinclair does not write nice things about. One midnight, Will and a friend, Cliff Gordon, who later became a stage comedian of note, were stranded in Bayonne, New Jersey. They walked to Jersey City, quite a distance, and at six in the morning there was only a stretch of Hudson River water between them and their jobs. How to get across was the question. This was answered pronto when the great embryonic industrial mind got to work. Will managed to get hold of a piece of cardboard, a piece of string and a lead pencil. He wrote the word "Blind" on the cardboard, and tied it around Cliff's neck, and the two then took up their seats at the ferry entrance. The fare was two cents, and before long the lads had four cents and were on their way home.

MR. SINCLAIR heard from Mr. Fox a hair-raising story about gambling. Fox's left arm is not normal. He cannot lift it above his shoulder. He does his golf playing with his right arm alone, and is supposed to be a good player, too. Ripley once made him a subject of one of his "Believe It Or Not" cartoons and credited him with having three times achieved the feat of a hole-in-one—a truly amazing thing for a one-armed player. Not only does he do this, but he manages to beat most of his two-armed rivals and bets his money on the outcome, as Nicholas M. Schenck and other picture executives will testify.

One day, Mr. Fox felt that he was in particularly good shape, so he wagered $1 on the first hole, $2 at the second hole, $4 at the third, $8 at the fourth, $16 at the fifth, and so on up. At the 15th hole, the bet was $16,384; at the 16th, it was $32,768, at the 17th, $65,536, and at the final 18th, the wager was $131,072 for a single hole—more than a quarter of a million dollars gambled on a golf game.

It all ended happily, however. W. F. won his money back, heaved a sigh of relief, and Sinclair wrote, "So I do not have to record that any of his business difficulties were due to losses on the golf course."

One of the most interesting sequences in the Fox narration tells about a visit which Mr. Fox paid to Herbert Hoover in the early days of Hoover's first presidential campaign. He said he told Hoover "that the Fox Film Corporation made and released in the theatres of America the Fox Movietone News, and that I would be happy to devote it in behalf of Herbert Hoover; that the Fox Movietone News had 10,000,000 theatre patrons and I considered it a very strong force, and a great ally for any political party to have." Mr. Hoover was supposed to have replied that Fox's offer was the most generous one that he had as yet received during his campaign and that he appreciated it.

Soon after the election, Mr. Fox called upon the President to seek his help in connection with a proposed Loew-Fox merger which was before Mr. Hoover's Department of Justice for an okay.

Fox is quoted as condemning vociferously the ethics in business of his so-called "enemies." Yet, the Fox boasts loudly and long about the time, early in 1930, when he was anxious to get some inside Wall Street information and he invited to his luxurious Park Avenue apartment "one of the editors" of the New York TIMES. He said he plied him with "Scotch" until the "editor" became "talkative," and Mr. Fox thereby got his information. Ironically, this incident is related in a chapter which is captioned, "The Trap Shuts."

Mr. Fox did not mention the name of this "editor," nor was he an editor, but an ordinary reporter—a "leg man."

Nature is making progress in the evolution of the Fox. Years ago, William Fox, fighter of trusts before he got the idea that he would like to control things himself, was well known for his big black mustache, heavy black hair and a capitalistic "paunch." Said Writer Sinclair: "He is a man of my size, which is medium. He used to be stout, but the long battle wore him down, and now he is medium again. He has a good Jewish nose, and a rather round face with a round dome above it. Time and hard work and worry have taken the hair off the dome and our Southern California sunshine has made it like that of a bronze Buddha."

INDEPENDENTS SURE OF GETTING 70 FILMS

International Company Formed by Oscar R. Hanson at Toronto; No Further Concessions Made to British Industry

by W. M. GLADISH

Toronto Correspondent

A truly international organization has been built up by Oscar R. Hanson of Toronto, staunch defender of the independents, and the immediate result is the establishment of Empire Films, Ltd., with head offices at 277 Victoria street, Toronto, for the purpose of distributing the selected product of studios in Great Britain, the United States and Continental Europe. The new enterprise starts out with contracts for the exclusive Canadian rights on 70 features and there are other surprises in the brief bag, it is intimated.

Empire Films Limited is handling the following features in the Dominion: 20 from British International Pictures, Ltd.; 20 from Majestic, New York; 24 from Mayfair, New York, and six specials from Associated Radio Pictures, Ltd., London. There is also one German production on the list.

In the organization process, Empire Films absorbed Ideal Pictures of Toronto, formerly Canadian distributor of Mayfair features. In addition to the head offices at Toronto, branches have been opened in the six key centers of Canada: Montreal, St. John, Winnipeg, Calgary, Vancouver, and the Ontario branch at Toronto.

The president of Empire Films, Oscar Hanson, has been much to the fore as general manager of Allied Exhibitors of Ontario and as general manager of Associated Theatres, Ltd., comprising 65 theatres operating on a cooperative basis in business details. The general manager of the new Canadian distributing firm is B. F. Lyon, who served in the same capacity in Canada for Warner Bros. for seven years. Incidentally, Hanson was previously general manager of Canadian Educational Films for many years. James I. Foy has been appointed Ontario branch manager.

With 70 features available for the current season, Hanson promises to be a power in the Canadian field, particularly because of his close relationship with the independent exhibitors from coast to coast. It means, for one thing, that the independents are not likely to face a film shortage for a long time.

Much Talk, No Action

While there was much talk in Canada about further concessions to the British film industry as a result of suggestions at the Imperial Economic Conference, nothing has been done about it by the Dominion Government.

In fact, no mention was made of motion pictures in the resolutions of Prime Minister Bennett before the Canadian House of Commons in session to enact tariff and preference revisions under the terms of the trade treaty with the United Kingdom which had been signed at the Conference. Free entry was granted to many British products and there were no less than 225 items in the listed revisions, covering a wide range, but it might as well have been back in the Gay '90's for all that the legislators thought of films. Even the Conference suggestion of a special levy on foreign films imported into Canada, other than British pictures, apparently has gone into the official wastepaper basket. The Canadian Government has done nothing in the way of reducing the sales and special excise taxes on imports because the time is not propitious, so it was said.

Thus, the Imperial Conference has gone for nought in so far as the film industry is concerned.

On arrival in Canada the other day, Ernest W. Fredman, editor of Daily Film Renter, London, told the Canadian public that the British producers did not want a film quota in Canada and that they would be satisfied if exhibitors gave British pictures "a good break."

Fight for Royalties

Apparently the writers and composers of Canada are organizing to cut in on the royalties which, they claim, are now going to foreign countries. There has been formed the Authors' and Composers' Association of Canada with headquarters at Toronto. Dr. E. C. MacMillan, president, has declared that one object, under the constitution, is the obtaining "of a share of royalties" on works played in Canada for which copyright fees are now going out of the country. Just what will be its relationship with other societies is not known, but a domestic fight appears to be brewing.

Speaking of copyrights, the Canadian Performing Rights Society won its case against the Madison theatre, Toronto, and collected nominal damages of $10 because the theatre presented a picture, "The Dirigible," in which "Little White Lies" was played as incidental music. The Society obtained an injunction restraining the theatre from playing this selection without permission. The society said it owned and controlled the copyright assignment on this composition. At the trial W. S. Brady, manager of the Madison, swore that he had made various attempts to obtain a list of the society's compositions, but had failed. Incidentally, he said that the music of "Little White Lies" occupied less than 30 seconds of the picture's running time.

Another Silent Closes

One of the last of the silent houses in the Dominion is the Johnston theatre at Cardinal, Ontario, and now Mrs. W. J. Johnston, the proprietor, is closing its doors forever after 13 years because there is no more silent film.

The last of the silents in Toronto, the Colonial theatre, is still operating, but the analogy exists that some of the pictures are so old that they are new.

There are indications of increasing disputes between independent exhibitors and the union operators in numerous cities in Canada. Another downtown house in Toronto, the Variety, has gone open shop and the union's sentries are on duty in front of the theatre. Several more exhibitors are said to be following the move.

What's more, plans are under way, it is said, for the formation of a strictly Canadian Operators' Union under the auspices of the All-Canadian Congress of Labor, to oppose the International Operators' Union whose headquarters are in New York. The idea is that the new union would be controlled in Canada and the operators' fees would be kept in Canada in their entirety. Already independent unions are operating in Hamilton and Ottawa, while a branch is in process of organization in Toronto. A fourth branch is mooted at Montreal. These locals are to be consolidated, it is said. The result will be that exhibitors will enjoy a choice of "union operators" at least.

Incidentally, five theatres at Ottawa have been on the outs with the International Operators' Local for two years. A number of theatres at Hamilton, Ontario, have been "non-union" for months while a deadlock exists at Saskatoon, Sask.

Soviet Propaganda

Certain topical reels have been banned by the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors as being Soviet propaganda films, following a complaint by Ernie Marks, proprietor of the New Martin theatre, Oshawa, that the subjects were apparently not what they were supposed to be—newsreels. Several of them had been passed by the Ontario board and had been played by Marks, but when the people began to talk he took action. Marks is a former mayor of Oshawa and is a leader among the independent exhibitors of Ontario, having been president of Associated Theatres, Ltd.

Federal Censor Commission Is Recommended for Canada

Following the establishment of the Canadian Radio Commission at Ottawa to exercise control over all broadcasting in the Dominion, support was given to a resolution at a recent meeting in Hamilton, Ontario, to recommend to the Canadian government the organization of national board along similar lines for the federal censorship of motion pictures.

At present there are eight provincial film censorship boards in Canada, a setup to which British film producers have objected because of the facilities provided in unified censorship in other dominions, not to mention the savings in time and censorship fees. The suggestion for federal film censorship in Canada was presented at a meeting held under the auspices of educationalists.

See Fox Representation On Gaumont British Board

The issuance by Gaumont British in London of prospectus for a new issue of 4½ per cent first mortgage bonds is seen in certain quarters as indicating Fox Film representation on the Gaumont British board of directors. Fox holds a 45 per cent interest in the major English company, and it is understood closer cooperation is considered desirable.

Clayton Sheehan, Fox foreign sales manager, has completed a deal with Gaumont-British to distribute all of its product in Australasia, previously handled by British and Dominions.

U. S. FILMS LOSING IN AUSTRALIA BECAUSE OF THEMES, SAYS HOLT

British Product Gaining Ascendancy as American Veers From Simple, Homely Subjects to Crime and Violence

by CLIFF HOLT

Sydney Correspondent

American pictures are losing caste in Australia, and American producers can blame nobody but themselves. If the American producer-distributor organizations wish to retain the supremacy that has been theirs for years, they must get busy at once with a close study of Australia's film requirements and make an earnest endeavor to meet them.

American pictures are being criticized in the Australian press every day. For a time I thought this was partly because they were foreign. Now I am convinced that such is not the case. American films are losing their dash purely because, in the main, they are no longer a mirror of life as it is led by the millions. Altogether too frequently—to suit Australian tastes—do American films deal with murder and suicide and lust and hate and the falsity of mythical millions; and altogether too infrequently are they devoted to plots of simplicity, such as the "Patsys," the "Daddy Long Legs," the "Rebeccas of Sunnybrook Farm."

British films, and our own, are giving Australian audiences just the type of entertainment they desire and are scoring well, while the more spectacular American productions, the more expertly produced pictures, are reaching Australian screens with a great fanfare, only to fall away after the effects of terrific publicity have died into the night.

There are exceptions. Ocasionally American films arrive that are devoted to everyday occurrences, and when they do, audiences welcome them, for, in the treatment of such plots, American producers have no peers. "Dangerous Years" can be cited as an instance; so can "Tom Brown of Culver." Though a lot may refute my statement, there will be more praiseworthy comment passed about these two pictures than a dozen or more grandiose, "mighty epics" that have been released here lately.

A Checkup of Themes

Somebody has kept a close check on what the screen has been presenting in the last few months; and the following newspaper report from Melbourne may prove illuminating to American producers, and, incidentally, to those who say that the Australian censor is a prude. Under the heading, "Criminals and Drunkards Depicted as Heroes," the report proceeds:

"The Rev. J. H. Cain told the Victorian Chief Secretary, Mr. Macfarlan, that a Sydney social worker had witnessed 250 films, in which there were 97 murders, 70 cases of unpleasant family occurrences, 22 abductions, and 45 suicides. Of the heroes and heroines, 176 were thieves, 25 were women of ill repute, and 45 were drunkards."

That statement was made as part of a deputation's argument to the minister that the Victorian Conditional Clause, which is to be eliminated, should be retained. Under the Conditional Clause, no Victorian child between the ages of 6 and 16 could view a film that had been classified as "Conditional." As the regulation proved unwieldy and was not welcomed by parents, the Government was obliged to repeal it. That it was repealed was a great boon to Victorian exhibitors, and to distributors.

However, their troubles are not yet ended, for it is suggested that with the removal of the clause, censorship will become so rigid that unless a film is suitable to both child and adult, permission for its exhibition will be refused. If this situation is brought about, exhibition in Victoria will become almost an impracticability. Under the Conditional law, fully 50 per cent of the pictures classified were declared unfit for children.

This, then, is the danger American producers must face here. They must realize that, when it comes to a showdown between American and British films, the brand "made in U. S. A." no longer sells a film but may prevent its sale.

Hoyts-Greater Union Combine

Formation of General Theatres Corporation—amalgamating the major theatres of Hoyts Theatres, Ltd., and Greater Union Theatres, Ltd.—is not looked upon as the best of developments in Australian amusement circles. Various attacks have been made upon the combine, some obviously inspired, others through a complete misunderstanding of the facts.

The critics argue that the combine will force prices so low that the distributors will have no option but to offset their earnings from the circuits by taking it out on independent exhibitors; that, through the operations of the pool, independents will be swallowed up or forced out of business, and that generally, the deathknell of the industry here was sounded when the signatures to the agreement were written.

History will be repeated. The Fullers, for instance, is a rapidly growing circuit, and one that, under the shrewd guidance of Sir Benjamin Fuller, will ever be just a little on the right side of the margin. Significantly, the Fullers, which had the pick of MGM product last year, again have that prerogative in 1932-33.

Without any doubt, the idea of the Hoyts-Greater Union amalgamation was to reduce operating costs. Certainly, this will mean reducing them partly at the expense of the distributors, but not unduly. Gayne Dexter of Everyones, picture business paper, writes: "Two big companies have been forced together by the banks; and a forced marriage—wherein neither party is willing, but stern parents say they must—is rarely a happy or a permanent one. . . . It will be a matter of compromise; for both sides have weapons they are afraid to use."

Rentals will come down, but not unduly, partly because the combine would not expect to get its program material for nothing, and partly because the distributors wouldn't let them get away with it anyhow.

That, then, appears to dispose of the idea that the Hoyts-Greater Union fusion is going to make the renting firms stagger and indirectly hurt the independents. The suggestion that suburban independents will be swallowed up is out of tune with conditions.

Hoyts-Greater Union Theatres Merger Raises Familiar Bugaboo, But History Shows the Independents Win Through

Capitalized at 25 Millions

Formation of General Theatres Corporation of Australasia, Ltd., capitalized at $25,000,000, followed reports spread on and off since the two concerns reached a buying agreement in 1929.

In the official announcement it was set out that the new company would manage the theatres, that the managing directors would be Charles E. Munro and Stuart F. Doyle, and that programs would be purchased for every theatre on the two circuits.

There is more to it than that, however. An important point not widely publicized is that Hoyts' suburban theatres are not concerned in the deal; nor are the Union houses in Tasmania and Newcastle, and the Union subsidiaries, which include the Cinesound production unit and the distributing organization, British Empire Films. Actually, then, the deal affects only the city houses controlled by Hoyts and Union, apart from the one consideration that all film will be bought for the entire 158 theatres owned by the respective corporations. These city theatres are:

SYDNEY: State, Capitol, Plaza, Regent, Haymarket, Lyceum, Lyric, Empress, Rialto.
MELBOURNE: State, Regent, Plaza, Hoyts De Luxe, Lyceum, Melba, Strand, Empire.
BRISBANE: Regent, Tivoli, Wintergarden, Valley, Majestic.
ADELAIDE: Regent, West's, York, Civic, Grand.
PERTH: Capitol, Ambassadors, Prince of Wales, Regent, Majestic.
FREMANTLE: Majestic, Princess.

The agreement provides that General Theatres Corp. will lease the theatres from Hoyts and Greater Union, as from January 1, 1933, operate the houses, take the profits—if there are any—and split them 50-50, between the two companies. Its currency is for 10 years, but should it be found that justice is not being done to the interests of either Hoyts or Greater Union, there is provision for a long-distance notice of termination, at the expiration of which each company would revert to its former status. The directorate consists of three members of each organization—Charles E. Munro, Stanley S. Crick and Clifford Minter for Hoyts; Stuart F. Doyle, F. J. Smith and R. W. G. MacKay for Greater Union. There is no chairman of directors, but the agreement contains machinery to cover any deadlock.

While the exclusion of Hoyts' suburban theatres from the transaction surprised the trade, it is nothing to be wondered at. For years the Melbourne suburbs have practically carried Hoyts city theatres; they have represented that company's strongest source of revenue.

WOMEN'S GUILD TO FILM AND SHOW AD SUBJECTS

Two Hundred Loew Theatres Signed in Project for Morning Showings; Subjects Pertain to Home and Women's Interests

The newly formed Women's Screen Guild announced this week that it will produce and exhibit talking advertising pictures sponsored by national advertisers. The primary purpose of the Guild will be to produce reels, exhibitions of which the national advertisers will pay for on a basis of actual attendance at morning showings.

Two hundred Loew theatres have been signed, and the Guild plans to negotiate similar deals with other large circuits and later with independents.

The Guild expects the project to increase the earning power of exhibitors whose theatres are used and at the same time not compete with, or become a part of, the regular programs. It has been estimated that screen advertising, frowned upon in normal times, would mean an extra $18,200,000 yearly for exhibitors throughout the country.

The Women's Screen Guild will inaugurate its series of pictures this month. The films will present authoritative information on subjects pertaining to the home and women's interests in general. Actual demonstrations by leading authorities will show to the audiences the workings of new aids to effective and easy management of the home. The field will include every item of home activity that comes under the jurisdiction of the housewife, beginning with the kitchen, its appointments and functions, and extending not only to every room in a house but also to the garden and garage, the cellar and attic.

It is expected that the pictures will demonstrate the products of from 12 to 30 advertisers, who will pay on the basis of tickets turned in at the box-office.

The Guild Advisory board is headed by Emily Post, national authority on etiquette, and includes, among many social leaders Mrs. Lyttleton Fox, Mrs. W. Halstead Vander Poel, Mrs. Ben Ali Haggin, Mrs. Fisher Whitney, Mrs. James H. Snowden, Mrs. Tony Sarg, and Nancy McClelland, interior decorator.

Officers of the Women's Screen Guild are: Laurence S. Brigham, president and chairman of the board; Stewart Wells, vice-president in charge of advertising and scenarios; Kenneth M. Murchison, vice-president in charge of architectural design and decoration; Edward Frank Allen, vice-president in charge of public relations; Leslie V. Spencer, treasurer and general manager, and Silas Seadler, secretary in charge of theatre relations.

Theatres Suffer As Bank Holidays Cut Attendances

Exhibitors in numerous states are feeling directly the effects of the various bank holidays declared within the past week or two and the restrictions imposed upon withdrawals. In these cases, theatre operators, to meet a situation recognized as trying, are resorting to unusual methods in an effort to continue operation and retain attendance figures as near to average as is possible.

In Baltimore, as a result of the continued bank holiday declared by Governor Ritchie of Maryland, the greatest difficulty experienced by exhibitors was in the making of change. Business maintained a reasonable high, however, with Saturday and Sunday night crowds displaying marked good humor at the unprecedented situation. At Annapolis, Phillip Miller, owner of the Annapolis, attracted considerable general press attention with his announcement that patrons who had no funds might gain admission with neither registration nor I.O.U.'s, and "be on their honor to pay later."

In Cleveland, Ohio, it is planned to extend credit to responsible exhibitors during the current bank crisis, limiting withdrawals to five per cent of deposits. Exhibitors in other Ohio cities are confronted with much the same situation, notably Dayton, Columbus and Akron.

Michigan and Pennsylvania are restricting banking operations, the Michigan bank holiday apparently having precipitated similar crises in other situations.

Full Cooperation Vital to Recovery, Says Will Hays

Describing the "democracy of cooperation" as the American system, Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, told the Association of New York Business Paper Editors recently that cooperation is "the one unfailing light to guide the world back to prosperity."

Mr. Hays declared the one alternative to the democracy of a common purpose is a dictatorship of bureaucratic will. Equally necessary to the stabilization of employment is cooperation between industry and labor, said Mr. Hays. Such cooperation is important as well in an international sense, he said, in a world "tightly bound in a net of debt obligations."

"The public today," declared Mr. Hays, "demands higher, not lower social standards in American business. It demands greater, not lesser, protection from individual rapacity. It demands more, not less responsibility from business management in the solution of employment and labor problems. Only through organization may the influence of the many be directed as a unit toward the accomplishment of a public purpose."

WARNER TRAIN SPEEDS UP RECORDS AT STOPS TIMED TO FILM OPENINGS

Stars on "42d Street" Special to Inaugural Attract Crowds at All Hours En Route Eastward; Will Have Float in Parade

A NIGHT FLASH OF THE WARNER "42ND STREET" SPECIAL ON WAY EAST

Warners "42nd Street" Special is steaming across the country from Hollywood, leaving a train of ballyhoo that is steaming up opening day attendance figures in key cities en route.

It was on the morning of February 21 that Governor B. A. Rolph of California christened the special train with a bottle of appropriate content. The train moved out of Los Angeles and has slowly made its way toward Washington, where its passengers—stars, executives and others—will participate in the festivities marking the inauguration of Franklin D. Roosevelt as President of the United States.

Several cities, including Denver, Kansas City, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland and Pittsburgh, have been the scenes of demonstrations unique in the history of "personal appearances." Thousands have crammed railroad stations to get a glimpse of the trainload of stars. In small towns, where the train stopped only ten minutes, entire populations turned out to accord a welcome.

Jack Warner in Charge

Jack L. Warner, production executive, is heading the contingent, which includes all Warner stars except those actually engaged on productions at the time of the departure.

"We are sincere in trying to impress upon the public the fact that times are going to get better and that a little gayety and laughter will improve the national temperament," Mr. Warner said in Kansas City. "If the expedition has an air of 'ballyhoo,' it should be remembered that it is our business to entertain."

The special train will arrive in Washington on the morning of the inauguration and a float will carry the stars and chorus girls who were selected to make the trip. Tom Mix, former Universal star, will ride his horse, King, in the parade, as a part of the Warner unit.

Timed to Film Openings

The expenses of sending the train across the Continent are being borne by General Electric Company. General Electric not only fulfilled the Warner request that the train be gilded and decorated with lights, but also equipped it with a model electrical kitchen and other electrical apparatus. One car was converted into an atmospheric interpretation of Malibu Beach, with sand on the floor, surf painted walls, palm trees, and sun lamps providing the troupers with a sun tan after their departure from the sun-kissed state.

After the inaugural parade and ceremonies, the stars will make appearances at the opening of the picture in Washington and will then go on to Baltimore, Philadelphia, Boston and New York in time for the opening on March 9.

The arrival of the train in key cities was timed to coincide with the film opening. According to home office officials, business has been more than double its usual figure in those cities, as a direct result of the exploitation.

In Kansas City, where the train made its first stopover, the theatres are reported to be doing a "boom" business; at the Newman theatre, where the picture opened February 24 there were more than 700 standees.

At Dodge City, Kansas, crowds waited in the railroad station until 3:30 a.m. to catch a glimpse of the train and the stars during the ten-minute stop. One of the biggest receptions for a small town was given at Lawrence, Kansas, where the stores put on "42nd Street sales" and the schools were closed for an hour. Indians from Haskell Institute put on a war dance for the visitors and the Warnerites responded with a ten-minute broadcast over the train's specially built transmitters.

In the larger towns where personal appearances of the stars were made in conjunction with the picture opening, mayors, state and other officials have led the delegations meeting the train.

At the offices of S. Charles Einfeld, director of publicity for Warner Bros., it was pointed out that this exploitation was designed to show the nation that motion pictures are "far from being down and out," and that films are not being supplanted by crossword and jigsaw puzzles.

Stars making the trip are Bette Davis, Joe E. Brown, Tom Mix, Jack Dempsey, Claire Dodd, Glenda Farrell, Lyle Talbot, Eleanor Holm, Helen Vinson, Preston Foster, Laura La Plante, Harry Seymour and Leo Carrillo, in addition to the twelve chorus girls selected from those who appeared in the picture.

Fox Theatres Faces New Suit

A new petition against Fox Theatres, Inc., was filed last week in Suffolk superior court, Boston, by Chicago Title and Trust Company. The petition, similar to the one withdrawn a few days before, states that on June 22, 1932, in federal district court, New York, William E. Atkinson and John F. Sherman were reported receivers for the company at the request of the Chicago concern and that since attachments are being made by creditors against the Fox interests in Boston, it is essential that receivers be named to preserve those interests. Part of the Fox interests in Boston, it is alleged, is the capital stock of Boyleston & Tremont Corporation, against which it has a claim for $350,000.

At Hartford, Conn., Judge Edwin S. Thomas, in the U. S. district court, granted New York Trust Company and Boyd G. Curts permission to foreclose on properties owned by Fox New England Theatres in Connecticut. The New York Trust and Mr. Curts are trustees for the bondholders. They are said to represent holders of $13,852,500 in first mortgage bonds. In addition to the principal amount, Fox New England Theatres, Inc., defaulted in payment of interest amounting to $346,312.50, due Feb. 1, and also failed to add $70,000 to the sinking fund, it was charged.

Arrangements were made at the hearing to combine first and second mortgage bonds in order that the holders of second mortgages might share alike with first mortgage bondholders.

B & K Receivership Petition Is Filed

A petition asking equity receivership for Balaban & Katz Corp., owners of controlling interest in 35 theatres in Chicago and suburbs, was filed in Chicago federal district court Saturday. The petition was filed by attorneys for Rose Philbrook, holder of a $1,000 note.

Paramount-Publix Corp., now in receivership, owns 96 per cent of Balaban & Katz common stock, according to the petition, which charged that "if the Balaban & Katz concern carries out its obligations to the Paramount-Publix Corp., which were fraudulently incurred, bankruptcy threatens." The petition further charges improper management in the purchase of Publix-Great States Theatres, a Publix subsidiary. The book value of the Publix Great States stock for which B & K contracted to pay $2,550,000, is actually $1,535,578 less than the sales contract price, the bill charges. Current assets are less than one half of current liabilities which total about $3,000,000 and 1931 earnings did not warrant payment of common dividends because ample reserves had not been set up, the petition declared. The petition argues that if purchase of Publix-Great States is completed, B & K would be unable to meet its obligations on maturing bonds.

Fight Great States Move

Efforts to throw into receivership 50 to 60 theatres belonging to Publix-Great States will be vigorously opposed, it was declared following a hearing before federal judge George E. Q. Johnston in Chicago this week. The Philbrook petition alleges that B & K has endangered its position through payment of dividends on common and preferred stock and that the company's position is further jeopardized by assumption of an obligation to repurchase 30,000 shares of Paramount stock issued in 1929 in order to acquire control of Great States Theatres.

According to E. D. Adock, of Spitz and Adock, B & K attorneys, the receivership petition was a complete surprise.

"There is no excuse for this suit," he said. "Balaban & Katz is in a good position. From what I have been able to learn, Mrs. Philbrook owns a gold note of the 1928 issues, which is not due until 1935, and the interest has been paid."

The petition states that B & K issued $7,500,000 of gold notes, of which $3,800,000 are outstanding. It contends that a dividend of $1,000,000, paid on a basis of a profit of $1,515,419 in 1932, should not have been paid and that enough money has not been set aside for depreciation.

A receivership suit was filed Tuesday in New York supreme court against Film Production Corp., Paramount subsidiary, by Milton L. and Irving L. Ernst, executors of the will of the late Augusta L. Ernst, owning two Paramount $1,000 gold bonds, and Arthur B. Gochemour, who has 10 of the securities. Action is pending before Justice Aaron J. Levy.

Adolph Zukor and Charles D. Hilles, temporary receivers in equity for Paramount, were directed last week in an order signed by federal judge William Bondy to show cause why they should not join as plaintiffs in New York supreme court actions brought against Paramount-Publix Corp., and others, by Relmar Holding Company, Inc., a bondholding concern, and Max Nathan, individual bondholder. The order was obtained by Emily Marx, attorney for the bondholders. It also directs the receivers to show cause why they should not, as an alternative, be directed to sue Film Production Corp. for return of 23 pictures received by it from Paramount-Publix, and profits which have accrued from the showing of the films.

ASKS DIGNITY IN ADVERTISING

A plea for dignity, simplicity and elimination of sensationalism in motion picture advertising was voiced recently by Florence Fisher Parry, writing in the column, "On With the Show," in the Pittsburgh Press. As an example, the writer points to the advertising of "Cavalcade," recently playing at the Nixon theatre, in which: "No attempt was made to introduce a 'love' interest; no melodramatic peak was featured. 'Cavalcade' was not ballyhooed." The writer also questions the contention of the producers who prepare the press books from which the exhibitor derives his advertising cue, that the public will only respond to the sensational manner of presentation. These producers are scored by the writer for not having attempted the practice of "good taste" in advertising in order to ascertain the public's reaction, its response comparatively. Noted are numerous pictures which "would have lent themselves to dignified advertising."

Charles Skouras Is a Receiver for Fox West Coast

Judge William P. James, in United States district Court at Los Angeles, on Monday appointed Charles P. Skouras and John Treanor co-receivers for Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation, operating principally in California. A voluntary petition in bankruptcy, filed for the corporation by Charles S. Buckley, petitioned that the properties and others of its subsidiaries continue to be operated until a trustee is appointed by the court.

The action was taken following a meeting of the directorate Saturday afternoon at headquarters in Los Angeles. Seventy-five per cent of all creditors are said to be represented by $13,000,000 which is owed to Wesco Corp., a Delaware company, and by $2,000,000 which is owing to Fox Film Corp., New York.

The bankruptcy directly affects approximately 42 theatres in California, Arizona, Oregon and Washington. The corporation owns stock in a number of subsidiaries which operate about 280 houses in 13 Pacific Coast and Midwestern states. These are protected under 27 corporate structures which were set up at Sacramento several days ago under California corporate laws.

The petitioner stated that on February 25 it sold and transferred leases and furnishings of 38 other theatres to others, in an effort to segregate paying properties that could be operated as a unit successfully. Several houses of the company are expected to be closed.

No schedule of assets and liabilities was filed, the corporation availing itself of the ten-day privilege in filing. Lawler, Degman and Loeb, attorneys of Los Angeles, represented the circuit and it was indicated that the temporary co-receivers, who were ordered to post bonds of $150,000, represent the principal creditors. There has been no mention of a candidate for

RKO Subsidiary's Petition Is Heard

A voluntary petition in bankruptcy was filed Monday by RKO Theatre Operating Corp., in New York federal court through Harold B. Franklin, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp. president.

The petition was filed by Gordon E. Youngman, attorney, who explained that the RKO subsidiary operates theatres in Greenwich, Conn., and in Irvington, Lyndhurst and Rahway, N. J., and has a leasehold and equipment in Arlington, N. J. The petition was heard by Federal Judge Coleman, who was to appoint a receiver in bankruptcy this week. No schedules accompanied the petition, but the subsidiary's creditors were listed as Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp. and Fox Metropolitan Playhouses. The value of leaseholds, supplies and equipment is said to be $169,590 after deducting reserves of $11,163. The corporation has on deposit with landlords $42,825 and $900 in banks in New York, Connecticut and New Jersey. Accounts receivable total $19,804.

37,000 Theatres Of 61,924 in the World Are Wired

Approximately 37,000 motion picture theatres of the world's total of 61,924, are wired to show sound pictures, according to the United States Department of Commerce, Motion Picture Division, which last week completed its annual investigation of picture houses on both continents. The total of all motion picture theatres was an increase of only 373 over the previous year's figure, while those wired grew by 8,000.

The figures, which were said to be based on January 1 totals, show Europe continuing in the lead with 30,623 theatres, of which 17,822 were wired. The United States is second, having 19,042 houses, with 14,000 wired, according to the federal survey. Third is Latin America, with 5,546 all told and 1,830 wired; next is the Far East, which has 4,922 and 2,147, respectively, and Africa and the Near East, with 690 total, of which 379 were wired.

TELEVISION SEEN AS A FACTORY PROBLEM

General Scientific Obstacles Now Overcome, Says Acting Chmn. of U. S. Commission, Urging Reduction of Expenses

Television has surmounted general scientific obstacles and now faces the problem of being developed inexpensively enough to be commercially practicable, according to Harold A. Lafount, acting chairman of the Federal Radio Commission at Washington, which has control over radio and television broadcasting.

S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel recently expressed an opinion that television will not be a live amusement factor for some time because "the mass mind is not ready to accept television as it is. The public expects too much of it and we find it is not practical to spring it now." Evidently, Mr. Lafount agrees with Mr. Rothafel as to the current practicability of television, but the radio commissioner insists that it has passed the stage where there is any doubt that it is scientifically practicable. "The chief problem now is to cut down manufacturing and operating expenses so television will become a commercial industry," said Mr. Lafount.

From Commissioner Lafount and from records of his governmental bureau it was learned that although experimental laboratories have made no recent reports to the commission, it is understood significant progress has been made in the last few months, and obstacles which heretofore seriously have worried scientists have apparently been overcome sufficiently to assure their standing in the way no longer. Laboratories are now concentrating their efforts on reducing expenses of manufacturing and operation of television apparatus. The commission believes that the potentialities of television are almost limitless and that in combination with radio broadcasting it will become one of the country's greatest industries.

"Ever since its creation," says the United States Daily, "the commission has been frequently petitioned to put television on a commercial basis, as if the commission by the passing of rules and regulations could create for an industry a state of technical perfection which the best engineers of the country have not yet been able to achieve."

More Scanning Lines Needed

It is pointed out that the imperfections and limitations of present-day television result from the comparatively small number of television scanning lines. A number of years ago television was being developed on the basis of 48 scanning lines per picture, which means that whether the picture was an inch high or was projected to a large screen, the number of lines still remained at only 48. The number of lines has been gradually increased to 60, and some say the total can be raised to 240 lines. This would mean more detail could be transmitted though "the picture will still be far from approaching the quality of present-day motion pictures.

"Rather complex engineering problems are involved in the development of the associated apparatus for both low and high frequency amplification," says the writer in the Daily, "which will permit full advantage to be taken of the increased detail accompanying the increase of the number of scanning lines.

"Just at this point is where some of the television problems of the federal radio commission are encountered. The normal 60-line picture used by the majority of television experimenters today requires a single sideband modulation width of 43,200 cycles or 86,400 cycles emission for double sideband transmission. If the number of lines is increased to 120, at 24 pictures per second, which is the standard talking picture speed, maintaining the five by six proportion of height to width, the number of cycles required per sideband increases to 207,360, or a total band width of 414,720 cycles required for double sideband transmission.

New Part of Spectrum Needed

"It can thus be seen that if 240 lines are used with the methods known today, a single sideband emission of 829,440 cycles would be required, or using double sideband transmission, a total band width of 1,658.88 kc would be required for a single picture, which is almost twice the entire width of the whole present broadcasting band from 550 to 1,500 kc. The radio spectrum below 20,000 kc, is now crowded, and does not contain space for such wide band emissions" unless many other important services are abolished.

"For this reason it became evident that for pictures having any reasonable degree of detail it was necessary to find an entirely new part of the radio spectrum where comparatively wide frequency bands could be found for this new type of service, and consequently the so-called ultra-high frequency bands were selected. These bands run from 43,000 to 46,000 kc, from 48,500 to 50,300 kc and from 60,000 to 80,000 kc, including a total frequency space of 24,800 kc.

"This appears to be a relatively large amount of space for such a new service, but engineers of some of the leading companies say that eventually for good service to the public, channels having widths of approximately 2,000 kilocycles will be required, and on such a basis it can be seen that this apparently tremendous expanse boils down to only ten channels.

"Perhaps this single reason more than any other justifies the policy of extreme caution which has been followed by the commission in the approval of new television stations."

Milliken Lauds Contract In One of Three Addresses

The last barrier to the solution of the problem of the community and its motion pictures has been removed by the new optional sales contract being developed, Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, last week told a meeting of the Westchester County Federated Clubs at White Plains, N. Y., last week, in one of three speeches.

In the other addresses, delivered before the Boston Branch, Professional Women's Club, and before the Motion Picture Conference of the Eastern District Chairmen of the Federation of Women's Clubs, in Boston, earlier in the week, Mr. Milliken declared the greatest untold screen story is the story of the rise of the motion picture itself, and said the public sets the fashion in motion pictures as in gowns and millinery.

Blank May Close 25 Houses

A. H. Blank, trustee and receiver for 53 midwest theatres, may close 25 houses, he announced this week. Mr. Blank is receiver for Publix-Nebraska, Inc., and A. H. Blank Theatre Co. of Nebraska. He is trustee for A. H. Blank Theatre Corp. and Publix-Iowa, Inc., both of Des Moines. The reason given for the proposed closures was the difficulty of obtaining rent reductions, with the explanation that unless sizeable reductions were made it would be impossible to continue operation of more than half the theatres.

In Lincoln, Nebraska, bankruptcy schedules were filed this week in federal court by Beatrice (Neb.) Theatre and Realty Corp., affiliate of Publix-Nebraska. The schedules revealed total liabilities of $41,089.85. Assets were listed at $13,596.49, most of which is the claimed value of leases on the Rivoli and Rialto theatres in Beatrice. Of the liabilities $2,700 represents a secured claim, and $35,889.85 is unsecured. George O. Monroe, president of the corporation, and Alma B. Munroe, two of three creditors who filed the original involuntary bankruptcy proceedings against the company, are listed as holding the largest individual claims, $4,509.30 and $2,250.57, respectively.

Publix-Nebraska, which the schedules identify as a stockholder in the corporation, holds the largest claim for $24,638.67 advanced money.

The Paramount theatre in Seattle is now operating on a strictly non-union basis and is being picketed by representatives of the local projectionists' union. Dissatisfied because the theatre management refused to grant them full union wages, the union projectionists left the theatre booth at 8:20 p. m. on February 23 and the house was unable to continue its performance until 55 minutes later when non-union operators were obtained.

handling of funds that would be injurious to RKO stockholders was filed with Judge Eugene O'Dunne in circuit court. The denial was filed as an answer to the suit filed last month by Edward J. Hickey. The plaintiff seeks to have proposed refinancing of the company declared illegal.

Developments Elsewhere

In Cincinnati an amended petition for the appointment of an ancillary receiver for RKO Distributing Corp. and RKO Midwest Corp. was presented Monday to federal Judge Robert Nevin. March 20 was set for further hearing.

A petition for an ancillary receiver in bankruptcy for RKO Theatres Operating Corp. was filed in Newark, N. J., district court Tuesday. The petition was heard Wednesday by Federal Judge Fake.

Radio Corporation of America has placed a bid of $400,000 for the assets of DeForest Radio Co., subject to approval of United States district court. The bid of $400,000, already accepted by the receivers, was confirmed by Leslie Gordon, co-receiver for the DeForest company.

The bid excludes $100,000 in accounts receivable, making a sum of $500,000 available for distribution among DeForest creditors.

DeForest has been in the hands of receivers since last July. The company's statement, issued March 31, 1932, placed total assets at $5,034,441.

Federal Judge Bondy approved on Tuesday the new RKO leases on the two Radio City theatres, the Music Hall and the Roxy. The leases will terminate August 31.

Provisions are made in the new leases for an advance of $250,000 by RCA on the existing indebtedness of the operators of the theatres. Additional capital of $50,000 also will be advanced to the operators by RCA, and a special fund consisting of one-half the net receipts of the theatres will be set aside for the reduction of the RCA advances.

The original lease called for an annual rental of $1,200,000 for both theatres, to run 21 years. The rental remains the same, subject to adjustments when the final cost of construction of both theatres has been determined.

RCA Net Loss Is $1,133,585 For Year 1932

Radio Corporation of America, in its annual report for 1932, just issued, and including subsidiaries, shows a net loss of $1,133,585.65. The statement indicates an investment by RCA in Radio-Keith-Orpheum, at December 31, 1932, amounting to $13,440,228.75, in addition to which RCA was committed for the further amount of $2,925,329 on account of its subscription to RKO debentures. The latter amount, the report states, was paid during January, 1933. Following the final payment, RCA reports an investment in RKO of $16,365,558, consisting of $9,786,655 of six per cent debentures (84 per cent of the total debenture issue) and 1,647,063½ shares of common stock (64 per cent of the total outstanding common stock).

Total gross income of RCA from all sources during 1932 is put at $67,361,142.55, resulting in a net income before interest, depreciation and amortization of patents, of $5,075,901.32, after deducting operating expenses of $62,285,241.23. Surplus as of December 31, 1932 is recorded as $9,851,184.18.

the trusteeship, but the court is expected to act shortly.

Following filing of the petition by Mr. Buckley, a vice-president, who was authorized by the board, Charles Skouras, who is a partner with Spyros and George Skouras in Skouras Theatres, said the action was forced by high rentals, the existence of large purchase contracts and the recent wholesale reduction of admission prices.

S. R. Kent, president of Fox Film Corporation, said in New York in an official statement that this action had been forced by present business conditions, as well as lack of cooperation on the part of some of the company's landlords and bondholders who would not accede to the theatre circuit's request for concessions in fixed charges.

Points to Lower Cost Need

"Coming as this does," said Mr. Kent, "right at the front door of Hollywood, it should bring forcibly to the attention of the studio forces the necessity for a sharp readjustment of costs. It should demonstrate unmistakably to Hollywood that no branch of this industry can remain aloof from present economic pressure and that costs and operations can no longer continue on a pre-depression basis but must be adjusted downward to conform with existing conditions."

Later on Monday, word came from Seattle that the Fox-Columbia Corporation of Delaware announced purchase of the assets of Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc., for $425,000, 77 per cent of the appraised value. The deal was made on recommendation of E. W. Scott, trustee in bankruptcy, and with the sanction of Ben L. Moore, federal referee in bankruptcy.

Fox-Columbia Corporation, recently organized, has as its stockholders the creditors of Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc., one of the principals of which is Fox West Coast Service Company, which had a claim of $1,600,000.

Al and Mike Rosenberg head the new venture, which involves 28 Pacific Northwest theatres in Idaho, Washington and Oregon. The circuit has been in receivership for some time with Frank L. Newman, Sr., and E. W. Scott as co-receivers.

Pacific Northwest was operated by Fox West Coast prior to receivership and now will be operated as an independent venture by Rosenberg Brothers, who returned to Seattle two weeks ago following conferences in New York with the Skouras brothers.

At Boston the New York Trust Company and Boyd G. Curtis, as trustee for the stockholders of Fox Theatres Corp., filed suit in U. S. district court to foreclose a first mortgage on Fox New England Theatres, Inc., now in the hands of receivers.

Harry Asher, lessor of 20 of the Fox New England Theatres, has relinquished the group to the receivers of Fox New England Theatres, Inc. They were leased April 1, 1932, and include houses in Springfield and Worcester, Mass.; New Haven, Hartford, New London and Bridgeport.

PLANNED PROCEDURE NEEDED: MYERS

MYERS COMMENDS HERALD EDITORIAL

Dear Mr. Quigley:

May I speak a word of commendation of your fine editorial entitled "Planned Procedure for Industry?"

Undoubtedly industry in general and the motion picture business in particular could have been spared much of their present grief by planning which would have taken into account inevitable shrinkage in income due to the depression.

The adding of approximately 9,500 seats to the already over-seated situation in New York is a conspicuous case in point. As long ago as December, 1929, a committee of this organization made certain proposals to the so-called 5-5-5 Conference.

While this doubtless was not an ideal solution of a problem which had even then reached alarming proportions, I regret that no modifications or counter proposals were offered, and the suggestion never received any serious consideration.

Another problem now confronts the industry which calls for forbearance and cooperation, and that is the problem of continuing to serve that part of the public whose earning power is reduced for the time being almost to the vanishing point, so that their interest and good will may not be permanently alienated. I have been as anxious as anyone to keep up prices so long as there was hope of maintaining attendance at the old rates, but many of our neighborhood and small town houses are now confronted with the problem of operating on a 10c. and 15c. basis or not at all. It is an interesting theory to say that there are fifty cent pictures and ten cent pictures and to attempt to dictate admission policies for houses on certain classes of pictures; but in practice this is having the effect to deprive many worthy persons, including children, of the best in motion picture entertainment.

From your point of vantage you must be convinced that the small, low price house is the incubator for the great downtown houses. Children don't go to the downtown theatres; they form an attachment for movies in the smaller houses and then go downtown when they grow up. The same is true of persons in reduced circumstances; they go to the cheaper houses when they must, to the big downtown houses when they can. The two classes of houses are really not as competitive as has been supposed. Therefore, the efforts being made to compel these houses to hold up their admissions, and to put them back in playing time, not only are not helping the big houses, but are very seriously injuring the industry as a whole.—Abram F. Myers, Chairman and General Counsel, Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, Washington, D. C.

AGAINST PROTECTION

To the Editor of the Herald:

Shows like old "Uncle Tom's Cabin" would play big and small, no matter if they were two miles apart or 10 miles, even advertised right from the stage that they would be in the next (Bigger City) in a week or month.

Protection to me as it is now worked is very unfair. It does not even benefit the few that it is intended to benefit, because it makes them lazy. They don't have to go out and bill a show because no one can get a picture away from those few. Protection to me is like the Eighteenth Amendment: it only helps those few.

I want to put this right down in your little notebook that I will never ask protection outside my city limits, and the sooner all of the fellows get down to this, the better it will be for all. I find in going along that the ones that ask protection are poor sports, and that goes for all of them. They are even going so far right now as to be leading others to believe that we showmen do not need protection. I will fight protection as long as I live.—August C. Berkholtz, West Bend Theatre, West Bend, Wis., and a director of the MPTO of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan.

STAR RATINGS AND THE PUBLIC

To the Editor of the Herald:

I think it is a mistake for the exhibitor, distributor or producer to quote the rating that Liberty Magazine might give a picture, either one, two, three or four stars.

I have seen some mighty fine pictures, pictures that went over big with our patrons, that Liberty gave one star to. Others that received four stars didn't register.

But the point that I am getting at is this. The exhibitor will advertise a picture and play up the fact that Liberty gives it four stars, and it therefore must be great. Even the producer is starting to do it. I think it's a mistake (and I have done the same thing in my ads) for the reason that we are merely educating the people to judge all of our pictures by the number of stars that the Liberty Magazine might give them.

At any rate, it's food for thought.—Chet Miller, Manager, Fox Lincoln-Paramount and Princess Theatres, Cheyenne, Wyo.

LAEMMLE REPLIES

Mr. Terry Ramsaye,
Motion Picture Herald,
1790 Broadway,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Ramsaye:

You say you recall no wave of prosperity which hit the box office with the enactment of the Eighteenth amendment. But there was one, just the same. The closing of saloons marked a decided jump in national attendance at picture theatres. Some of this, of course, went back to the speakeasies, but not a very great part of it.

You say also that when I started to climb in this business there were saloons in Chicago. You are correct. But along came local option (long before the national prohibition law) and many saloons were closed. I immediately suggested to owners that they convert their premises into picture houses and many of them followed my suggestion with the result that I secured new customers for my film renting concern. Thus the picture business got a direct benefit from the closing of saloons. It got another when saloons throughout the country were closed.

I hope you understand my point. It is not the legalizing of beer and booze which makes me fear a resultant harm to the picture business, but rather the return of the open saloon, whether called a saloon, a drug store or some other kind of a store. And don't fool yourself about the competition of beer and pretzels. It's mighty strong competition, my boy!

Sincerely yours,
Carl Laemmle

ASKS CROSSWORD PUZZLE EACH WEEK

To the Editor of the Herald:

May I offer a suggestion for your most valuable weekly trade magazine?

I have read your popular magazine for a period of six years, and found it very interesting from every angle pertaining to the motion picture field.

My suggestion is that you insert a crossword puzzle every week, dealing with Hollywood, projection, exhibition, engineering, etc.

I am sure that the above suggestion would be very educational in this field.—Peter Rufo, Manager, Warner Theatre, Niles, Ohio.

PRODUCER AND EXHIBITOR

To the Editor of the Herald:

The relations between producer and exhibitor are not the usual relations between customer and wholesaler.

The idea of high pressure salesmanship regardless of expense, or even of sense, has been advanced with redoubled vigor. Eight or nine hundred dollars expense to oversell on exhibitor items that total 1,800 dollars, is common, both exhibitor and exchange losing heavily on the process.

The producers are still tied to the idea of close monopoly and hope, by means of inspired articles in reviews and magazines of opinion, to be able to continue practices that really get them nothing but grief.

On the hopeful side is the now certain rise of new producers and distributors. With this rise the trust will be broken down and the obsolete group will go the way of the old General Film Company.

1933 is the year of the new producer. To those thinking of that field, I urge action right now and predict sure success.

The secret of great riches and power in this business is simple. Make good pictures—that means don't try to make volume; this is not a manufacturing business. Sell the pictures you make to customers—not persons you wish to eventually eliminate. Finally, the new producers should keep away from the trust as the trust is going to have a very hard row to hoe in this man's land. Yours for a much better industry.—Herman J. Brown, New Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho.

The Big Cage

(Universal)

Animal Thrill Drama

Excitement engendered by wild lions and tigers being trained by the world's greatest animal trainer is the keynote of "The Big Cage." About it, with Clyde Beatty the center of all action, revolves the drama, romance, comedy, spectacle, pathos and thrill that complete the story.

Four sequences provide the big thrills. The first starts the picture; Beatty captures a tiger which has escaped from its cage during the unloading of a shipment of animals destined for the Whipple Circus. Second is a picturization of how Beatty proceeds to break a tiger for his act. Beatty is in the big cage with a tiger on the end of a stout rope. The animal is all over the cage, whipping and thrashing, and the preview audience thrilled to Beatty's daring. The tiger escapes from his leash and is mauling the trainer as his assistants fight it with clubs, guns and a fire hose. Third is a terrific battle between a lion and tiger which lasts for about three minutes. The fourth and climatic event shows Beatty putting his twenty lions and tigers through their act as the circus is struck by a sudden storm which maddens the beasts and throws the spectators into a panic.

Those features provide practically all the real audience interest. Secondary in importance are the comedy relief provided by Soupmeat and Scoops, the always scared feeder and cleaner-up; the love angle between Russ, the old trainer who has lost his nerve, and Lillian, the trapeze performer; the human interest brought in by little Jimmy, who believes that his father Tim is still a great animal trainer; the killing of Tim by the animals and little Jimmy coming under Beatty's tutelage.

Merchandising of "The Big Cage" should be centered in the novel excitement which the show offers. Build around Beatty and his lions and tigers. Strive to get over the idea that this is something new in animal pictures. There's no jungle atmosphere. Until the climax, the circus atmosphere is not important. The training of those animals, with Beatty showing how it's done, is the important idea. The danger, suspense and thrill should please audiences. There's romance and drama enough in that to make it easily possible to forget the man-woman love story.

Being an unusual attraction, it has entertainment for both children and adults. Selling it to both classes with a punchy, thrill-inspiring campaign should result in unusual box offices.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Strictly Personal

(Paramount)

Melodrama

A melodrama with a different human interest twist, "Strictly Personal" was undoubtedly made with an eye to entertaining the average theatregoer. No pretense is made toward anything startling and the cast features none but ordinary film names. Therefore audience interest will be confined to the plot of the story and the way in which it is told. That is done in a way to permit any of a number of expected things to happen, and while the obvious does occur, it is brought about in a manner that easily held the interest of the preview audience.

The story concerns the operation of a Lonely Hearts (get acquainted) Club and what happened when a gangster muscled into a perfectly legitimate enterprise. Annie is the friendly front for the Club, in whom the members have every confidence because she runs it on the level. Soapy is an escaped convict who stays in the background, but about him revolves all the drama. Mary, daughter of a convict friend of Soapy's, is sent to live with them. Soapy doesn't like the set-up, fearing that it may lead the cops to him, but he can't overcome his wife's determination to harbor the girl. Into the Club comes Magruder, who has a line on Soapy's past and turns the Club into a racket, which leads to his murdering Mrs. Castleton and taking her jewels.

Police center their investigation on Annie and Soapy. The pair are on the spot. But Soapy is one of those oldtime crooks, too smart for the cops. Mary has come under the spell of Magruder's charm and though she has sort of fallen for Andy, a glib small town reporter, she is a ready victim for Magruder's plans to abduct her. Situation is complicated by the advent of Mary's real father, who wants to see her, though she doesn't know who he is. When the crime is committed, Soapy doesn't hesitate for a minute in privately pinning the guilt on Magruder, and sets out to "get" him.

Mary's father, Jerry, is also in on the know and he too goes after Magruder, catching up with him and the girl as they are about to get into an airplane. He kills Magruder as Soapy is getting ready to shoot. Then the story fades out with the revelation that Magruder is the original murderer and the cops are satisfied.

Considered in the light of good program entertainment, in which the elements of drama and suspense are predominant, with just enough contrasting comedy to eliminate monotony, "Strictly Personal" should be a pleasing enough show. The title and Lonely Hearts Club theme suggest some timely and novel interest creating exploitation, which should be developed in a way that will have a personal appeal. There is plenty of opportunity for creating straight type ad copy to stimulate curiosity. One of the most prominent ad leads is the fact that in this picture Marjorie Rambeau and Eddie Quillan make their first screen appearances in about a year.

Go after the masses with this one. If such pictures as "The Night of June 13th" had any appeal to your clientele, you can look for "Strictly Personal" to do about the same kind of business.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Auction in Souls

(World Wide)

Dramatic Romance

Discount the lengthy introductory sequences wherein characters are established and audience sympathy is directed into the proper channels, and "Auction In Souls" becomes an interesting dramatic romance. A country boy and gal make good story, and there's a heart-tugging revelation of a boy's inability to understand and finally an exciting spectacle.

A little traveling tent-show stock company is the basis for the idea. Following Marlene's compromising death in New York, Walt Underwood learns that Jimmy is not his son. He goes the speakeasy route and the show, despite the protestations of Lou and Beef, goes on the rocks. Lou's finding Walt in a dive leads to a vicious-humorous shindig in which Beef, circus roustabout character, is the leading spirit.

Convincing Walt that he has something besides the boy whom he wants to forget to live for, Lou makes it possible for them to team up as a successful sort of Cecil and Sally radio team and put Jimmy in military school. When they decide to marry, Jimmy objects because once before he has seen the pair in a scene that he thought was off color. Walking out, he goes to his old pal, Beef, while Walt puts on a howling comedy salary-raising scene with the owner of the radio station, Brock.

Discovering that the boy is missing, they finally find him with Beef in a circus. They come into it just as an elephant goes berserk, panics the audience, and the tent is set afire. The frightened animals add thrill as Jimmy is trapped under a wagon, where he is found by Lou, who is attacked by an escaped tiger. Rescue is made by Beef and the climax is one of those everybody happy all-around affairs that pleased the preview audience.

The show is family type entertainment and the cast includes a better than ordinary list of names that should have a stimulating effect. The title is somewhat lurid and quite irrelevant to the theme, but the fact that the picture is based on a play authored by Eugene O'Neill is an advantage. Women will find their appreciation in the romance and drama as well as the heart interest that is associated with the Walt-Lou-Jimmy angle. The men will get a kick out of the tent show stuff, the Stanley Fields handling of the speakeasy brawl and the exciting finale. Children should find plenty to draw their attention in Tommy Conlon, whom you probably will best recall for his role in "Young America."

The tent-show-circus atmosphere suggests some novel exploitation possibilities other than the prosaic mediums commonly used. Changing your lobby into a replica of a circus entrance, using a barker and concocting some special posters announcing the "Underwood Players" in a show within a show, should be beneficial. Word of mouth advertising should be favorable.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Three Ambassadors

Our Betters

(RKO Radio)

Society Problem Play

Moronic in idea—amateurish in presentation—"Our Betters" is far from the type of picture one expects when Constance Bennett's name heads the list of players. The locale is England. The characters are the racy fringe of a decadent aristocracy and the satellites who surround them. The story is negligible. The whole thing seems to revolve around the question of whether Lady Pearl, who has "aired" her fortune-hunting husband immediately after marrying him, has the right to share the company of the frantically jealous Duchess's gigilo, Peppi, in a society where the custom of husband-wife swapping is apparently the accepted practise.

It talks and talks and talks; enough dialogue for half a dozen pictures. The preview audience laughed at and with the excessive verbiage, for some of it is really funny. The closing sequence introduced an ultra-effeminate "nance" character, who, in make-up, expression and action is about the last word in the picturization of a type that when presented as a passing atmospheric incident in other pictures has brought derisive guffaws and gasps.

"Our Betters" may be all right for the advanced sophisticates whose minds are attuned to a radical new deal in customs and morals, but it hardly seems to fit into a scheme of entertainment that will be received with appreciation by the great American family. In theatres whose patronage is composed of other than the most liberal minded, you can look for plenty of criticism and adverse comment when you play this picture. Therefore, in announcing its presentation and trying to tell what it's all about, it will be more important to be careful of what you don't say rather than what you do say. In other words, handle it with care, and put a twist on your copy, which will create the impression that the title is an exposing indictment of the class of people who consider themselves the betters, but who really are the "worsers."—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Oliver Twist

(Monogram)

Comedy Drama

Something has been lost in this screen version of Charles Dickens' immortal masterpiece of literature. All his famous characters are here; the screen play, generally, follows the original story closely; no modernization has been attempted—but the vital spark that caused "Oliver Twist" to become eternal is missing, so much so that the production becomes tedious and unless audiences are prepared in advance as to what to expect, considerable dissatisfaction is almost sure to develop.

Presuming that the "Oliver Twist" story is familiar to all, every showmanship activity should be concentrated on selling it in the right way to modern-minded audiences. Undoubtedly the great prestige of the Charles Dickens story will insure more than usual interest. Naturally, as the central character, Oliver, is a 9-year-old boy, a drive for maximum juvenile patronage is the primary consideration. Thus tieups with schools, Parent-Teachers Associations and other groups interested in children's entertainment should be sought. All the ideas commonly associated with such an effort should be applied—prizes for the best essays on the story and its characters, etc.; drawing contests, original reviews; and the old "what I liked about the picture" thought. Cooperation with newspapers to further this exploitation is necessary and should be easily procurable.

For the adults, the prestige of the story is the primary interest creating requisite. It's deep human interest, drama, tragedy, humor should be accentuated.

Everything should be done in a way that will focus attention on the story—not on the production. Get over the idea that audiences will see the picturization of a literary classic brought to the screen without any attempt at modernization, but be careful that they don't gain the impression that it is a "screen classic," otherwise you will have some explaining to do. Play up the characters—Oliver, Fagin, Bill and Nancy Sikes, Bumble, the Artful Dodger, et al, the Sowerberries and Mr. Brownlow—rather than the players; feature the fame of the story and "Oliver Twist" probably will do satisfactory business.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Man Who Won

(Powers Pictures)

Drama

Traditionally English in flavor, content, manner, "The Man Who Won" has nonetheless a homely, earthy atmosphere, a perennial story and competent workmanship which should endow it with an appeal to the American motion picture patronage of the lesser houses, especially in the smaller communities.

Scenically, in its background setting, the picture is definitely attractive, concentrating as it does for the most part on the English farmland and countryside. Authentic in speech, dialect, conduct are the natives of the country involved, and, after all, they are not so very different from the people of the American farm community and countryside.

For the exhibitor intending sale of the picture, there is the handicap of an almost complete lack of names in the cast of a substantial selling value. The performers are all English, however competently they do their work, and the speech is often difficult for the American ear. There is one player, however, whose English origin and accent is definitely offset by her physical attractiveness, her histrionic ability. Miss Heather Angel, possessed of a name highly euphonious, plays importantly, and ably. She is an incarnation of innocence and sweetness, using enormous black eyes unconsciously but with unusual effect, and becomes one of the most appealing feminine players seen on the screen in many a long day. Already in Hollywood, for Fox, Miss Angel is very much worth selling for possible future appearances.

The story is simple enough, concerning the manner in which a previously spendthrift young peer, suddenly "broke," turns to an old farm to rehabilitate himself, his self-respect. The neighboring farmer is thus cheated from the property he coveted, while his daughter, Miss Angel, covets the peer-farmer in a sweet way. Her father turns her out and she becomes the peer's servant, while his former fiancee lends a complication. The father burns the peer's earnest hayrick, and after a mental struggle the young man decides he will start over again—with a wife instead of a servant. A barroom fight between the two men and the burning of the hayrick provide moments of action.

Sold on the story's theme, based on the title, rather than on the cast possibilities, with due and deserved emphasis on Miss Angel, the picture should be found entertaining, reasonably strong in quality. The family may see it.—Aaronson, New York.

King of the Jungle

(Paramount)

Adventure Drama

Taking its place in the current list of the adventure cycle, wherein much of the fantastic is coupled with some of the credible, is Paramount's "King of the Jungle." In this case there roams the jungle as the best friend the carniverous lion ever had, one Buster Crabbe, who has achieved fame chiefly as a result of great prowess in the water, rather than on the stage or screen.

Mr. Crabbe does his level best and succeeds reasonably well in a role highly problematical. This does not offset the fact that the picture, as it stands, is well built for exploitation purposes and that these factors, if developed with some real showmanship and not a little ballyhoo, should bring the patrons in to find what it is all about, and should, particularly, bring a horde of the younger generation, hard on the heels of a jungle thrill. The lobby opportunities, along the animal-jungle-lion line, with all the fanfare and trumpets the exhibitor is able to muster, should not be neglected.

This is highly salable material, from the box office standpoint, however much it leaves to be desired from the point of view of credibility. That Mr. Crabbe, after being lost in the African jungle at the tender age of three, when his parents have been a rather satisfactory lunch for the lions, should suddenly appear at approximately 20, gamboling in the jungle with the lions, wearing a well made loin cloth of skin, but at the same time admirably shaven and hair-groomed, is a bit of a stretch for the most prolific imagination. The lioness, be it known, had brought him up, even as her own children.

Raiding and marauding with his lions, Crabbe is captured with several of them, sent to America with a circus. Escaping near shore, dazed by the motor cars and maiden-aunts in the park, he finds refuge in the apartment of Frances Dee, and forms a lion-like regard for her. Returned to the circus, she goes with him, as teacher, friend and the only person who can handle him. He learns quickly.

The best action occurs when the circus goes up in flames, the elephants rush panic-stricken through the streets of the city, and Crabbe rescues the trapped lions. They leave the circus together, the lion man and his teacher, to return to Africa, there to release the lions.

Let the ballyhoo bring them in, with plenty of stills of the physically splendid Mr. Crabbe playing with his lions. The youngsters in years, and those in spirit, will thoroughly enjoy themselves, and derive a real thrill or two. The adult should be rather amused inwardly but on the whole be rather well entertained. After all, the lions that Crabbe comports with are not exactly stuffed. One sequence, a fight between a lion and a tiger, is a high spot in the film.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Story by Charles Thurley Stoneham. Adaptation by Max Marcin. Directed by H. Bruce Humberstone and Max Marcin. Photographed by Ernest Haller. Release date undecided. Running time, 74 minutes.

Perfect Understanding

(United Artists)

Drama

Gloria Swanson has been gone from the scene these many months, and this effort was produced by her in England, but it is nevertheless true that her name, coupled with that of her husband, Michael Farmer, who is prominently cast in the picture, will be the best selling arguments connected with its exhibition. As to any effect her absence from the screen may have in the community, the exhibitor himself can best judge.

The picture, mounted with more regard for an excellent effect than for the exchequer, is brilliantly set. The scenery of the notable French beach resort, Cannes, forms a highly acceptable background for a good portion of the picture, but the story is not much more and not less than a marital—and extra-marital—tangle on a grand scale. There are few names of any real selling value, with the exception of Miss Swanson, though Laurence Olivier, John Halliday, Genevieve Tobin are well known to the American audience, and perform ably, as does the remainder of the supporting cast.

Miss Swanson, American girl, meets, loves and marries Olivier, nephew of an English peer. Olivier has had, it is understood, a rather complete understanding with Nora Swinburne, attractive though married. Miss Swanson and Olivier reach a "perfect understanding" prior to their marriage, concerned with individuality and the like. Then follow a honeymoon on the Continent, and a trip to Cannes by Olivier, while Miss Swanson goes on to London to arrange the flat. At Cannes, Olivier meets Miss Swinburne quite by accident, forgets his wife. Anyway, he believes she is enjoying herself with Halliday, an explorer. The perfect understanding thereupon becomes a veritable triumph of misunderstanding, climaxed by the divorce court, concluded with a not unexpected reconciliation.

It is more particularly a picture of feminine appeal, with the beach fashions of Cannes and the street fashions of Miss Swanson worthwhile from a style angle. The thematic angle of the wife's effort to combat a growing jealousy, of the husband's similar struggle, first against a most tempting temptation, later against what he believes is his wife's infidelity, which he utilizes in the manner of self-justification, may be used to create interest on the part of the masculine portion of the patronage. The Swanson name and the fact that the picture was made in England with her publicized husband in the cast, are the best arguments at the command of the exhibitor.—Aaronson, New York.

Sailor Be Good

Comedy-Drama

When the fleet comes in the fun will begin—and therein lies the exploitation and selling possibilities of this amusing, entertaining and occasionally rowdy cinema yarn, with Jack Oakie the center of the generous activity, with boxing and a few neat ring sequences thrown in to keep the spirit of the thing alive and well.

There is no really serious intent about the whole thing, but there is entertainment. The chief responsibility for preserving the general excitement lies with Oakie, and be it said that he does well by his charge, putting much of pep, laughs and general incentive into the piece.

Jack Oakie is necessarily the best marquee possibility, but he is at the same time ably supported by Vivienne Osborne, George E. Stone, Gertrude Michael and Huntley Gordon in a minor role. The title is good box office, and should be recognized—and utilized—as such. The advertising may well be in keeping with the spirit of the title, suggesting vigorous good humor, loving and laughter and some real scrapping, as the gobs do it.

Oakie comes ashore with ambitions in the direction of the fleet boxing championship, a penchant for the bottle and the girl and a line of smart cracks—in his own estimation. He falls with considerable dispatch and certainty for Miss Osborne, who returns the compliment, over the protest of Stone, self-appointed manager for the coming champion. When she realizes Oakie cannot train on bad gin and worse hours, she puts him on strict training, until his disgust sends him out to a drink and a meeting with Miss Michael. When he awakes next morning, he discovers he has acquired a wife. His conduct in elite surroundings leads to a divorce, but it is too late, Miss Osborne having meanwhile opened a sandwich shop to be alone with her hamburgers and broken heart.

Oakie meets the champion of the fleet in a fast ring sequence and is in the process of taking a complete beating, when Stone tells him Miss Osborne was knocked out by the champion the previous night when he felt playful and she did not. The inspiration there, he cleans the canvas with the champion, followed, of course, by the dressing room finish.

The exhibitor has lively entertainment to sell here, with a dash of amusement, a number of laughs and the active and appealing personality of Jack Oakie. The youngsters probably will enjoy it, and it will not hurt them.—Aaronson, New York.

The Crime of the Century

(Paramount)

Mystery Melodrama

Although this melodramatic mystery story is somewhat heavily dialogued, it does possess certain traits of originality, novelty and presentation, development of suspense and method of solution that will recommend it to lovers of crime-problem entertainment. Straight drama, built about a baffling series of circumstances, is its underlying theme, with incidental comedy contrast.

One unusual feature is the stopping of the picture after the second murder has been committed and after every person who might have committed either crime is fully identified, providing one minute for the audiences to see if they can determine who is guilty.

The story opens with Dr. Brandt excitedly demanding that Capt. Riley and Lt. Martin arrest him before he commits a robbery and murder that he has planned.

Probably the best way in which to create the maximum audience interest would be to capitalize to the utmost on the title, which carries an impressive ring, following it through with catchlines describing the characters and asking questions as to whether they could commit the crimes, how and why. Everyone, except McKee, had a motive. Then bring out the fact that the picture stops for a moment and asks those questions. It might also be a good idea to work out some tieups with local police chiefs and detectives, showing them the picture down to the break and using their opinions as part of your advertising. Unless women in your audiences are detective-mystery-story-minded there will be comparatively little interest for them, but a clever advance campaign can intrigue the interest of the men and older children. Shy away from any suggestion of "terror," but stress the novel mystery to the utmost.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by William Beaudine. From the play "The Grootman Case," by Walter Espe. Screen play by Florence Ryerson and Brian Marlow. Photographed by David Abel. Release date, Feb. 24, 1933. Running time, 75 minutes.

New Spectacles Help Near Blind To See Pictures

Just as the deaf have been enabled to hear in theatres through the medium of mechanical appliances, so can the blind be made to see clearly and without distortion through telescopic spectacles fitted with triple cylindrical lenses, Dr. William Feinbloom, chief optometrist at the Manhattan West Side hospital, New York, told an optometrists' convention in Chicago recently.

"Two out of five people who consider themselves totally blind have at least two per cent vision," he said, "and there is no reason why a quarter of a million in this condition should not see, as well as hear, motion pictures in complete enjoyment."

Interviewed in his New York clinic last week, Dr. Feinbloom expressed the hope that in a very short time every theatre in the country would be equipped with sets.

"During the development of these lenses," he said, "the value of the motion picture to the life of the nearly blind has been foremost in mind, and the tests and experiments which I have made have been centered largely upon the effectiveness of the lens for motion picture enjoyment. I examine on an average of 100 patients a day, most of whom insist that they are totally blind except to distinguish the difference between day and night, and in almost 80 per cent of these cases I have found the two per cent vision necessary for a cure through my lenses."

Cinema Classics Plays Up One Picture in Each Issue

Cinema Classics, a new publication which devotes each issue to the story of an outstanding film, has appeared on sale in five and ten-cent stores. The magazine is published by a company of the same name, at 380 Second Avenue, New York, and includes, in addition to the plot synopsis, a short life story of each of the featured players.

Originally submitted to M-G-M, the first publication featured "Strange Interlude" and was used by Metro as a sort of souvenir program in connection with road shows before it was first issued for sale by Cinema Classics. Paramount's "Blonde Venus" was the subject of the second in the series.

Miss Swanson Loses Case

Superior Judge Charles D. Ballard, Los Angeles, has returned a judgment against Gloria Swanson, now in England, of $37,500 in favor of Maurice Cleary, coast booking agent, said to be due him as commissions. He had asked $45,000.

Record for Fox, Brooklyn

The Fox theatre in Brooklyn, recently taken over by Harry C. Arthur, reports a new weekend record established at the theatre last week, with 11,000 patrons admitted on Saturday and 12,600 on Sunday, under a policy of four performances daily.

Mansfield Widow Would Aid Commemorative Play Staging

Mrs. Richard Mansfield, widow of the late famed actor, has suggested several plays, prominently associated with her husband's name, which might be fitting for the proposed presentation by universities and schools during the current year, the twenty-fifth anniversary of Mr. Mansfield's death. The plays are "The Devil's Disciple," "Arms and the Man," "Beau Brummel" and "Old Heidelberg."

Mrs. Mansfield, living at the Christodora House, 147 Avenue B, in New York, has offered her services to any group desiring authentic detail relative to costuming scenery or production of the plays.

William Fox Asks Dismissal of Suit

Answer was filed last week in chancery court at Wilmington, Del., by the All-Continent Corporation of New York, personal holding corporation for William Fox, asking for dismissal of the injunction and damage suit instituted against it on January 6 in the same court by United States Senator Daniel O. Hastings of Wilmington, receiver for General Theatres Equipment, Inc. Answer was filed by former Federal Judge Hugh M. Morris, of Wilmington.

The suit was authorized by Chancellor Josiah O. Wolcott there on January 4. The answer filed by All Continent denies all charges made in the bill of complaint regarding alleged unlawful transactions involving the corporation in connection with a settlement agreement of approximately $2,800,000 between William Fox and General Theatres Equipment in September, 1932.

Emphatic denial is made that Harley L. Clarke, executive of General Theatres, was not informed either previous or at time of settlement that Albert M. Greenfield, Philadelphia realtor, who arranged settlement for General Theatres for commission of $250,000, also had an arrangement whereby he would receive a participation of ten per cent in whatever Fox received from General Theatres in settlement.

General Theatres through its receiver, contends that this act by Mr. Greenfield was fraudulent, in that he had agreed to obtain as advantageous a settlement as possible for General Theatres and for which he finally received the sum of $250,000 in commission from General Theatres. Mr. Greenfield, according to the bill of complaint, received from Mr. Fox a note for $300,000 as his ten per cent of the amount of the Fox participation.

Majestic Forms Equitable As Film Buying Subsidiary

Majestic Pictures has organized Equitable Pictures, Inc., a subsidiary company, to buy pictures for distribution through Majestic exchanges. Equitable will have no set number of releases, but will, it is announced, interest itself in features that present unusual angles for spectacular exploitation.

The first three on the program are ready. They are: "What Price Decency," also "Gold Diggers of Paris," and "Cheating Blondes," with Thelma Todd starred.

Play Production On Profit-Sharing Basis Proposed

A comprehensive plan to revive a widespread and more personal interest in the theatre and at the same time provide an opportunity for new dramatists, actors, designers and managers to work in their chosen profession, has been formulated by Chamberlain Brown, producer and discoverer of "unknowns." Mr. Brown expects to give stage experience to a number of actors in whom picture companies are interested, actors who now lack professional theatre training.

Mr. Brown said his organization now numbers more than 2,500. "We propose," he said, "to select a play each week which we will perform for one week in one theatre. In order to place this enterprise on a financially sound basis we will need five thousand members at $1 each. This fee, payable at the box office of the theatre, not only carries with it the privilege of attending a performance but also a membership in the project which includes a property right in that particular play. If the play is sold for a Broadway production, or to a stock company manager, or to a picture producer, the money so obtained will be shared by the members supporting."

Mr. Brown reported he has received hundreds of requests to extend the plan to include such cities as Philadelphia, Boston, Hartford, New Haven, Pittsburgh and Washington.

Not only will new talent be brought into the theatre, but the subscribing members—the audience—will be given an opportunity to become better acquainted with the actors and actresses. It is this personal note, Mr. Brown believes, that is fundamental to the creation of a deep and continuing interest in the theatre.

The first 10 scripts selected by the play reading committee are without exception the work of men and women who never have had a play produced.

In addition to the weekly run of dramatic performances, Mr. Brown also plans to give a children's matinee on Saturday mornings and a concert on Fridays.

Hitler Censorship Is Seen Inimical to American Films

National motion picture censorship, aimed at American product, and of prohibitive proportions, is currently the subject of speculation in Germany. The cabinet of the Nazi chief, Herr Hitler, is already understood considering a ban on all United Artists' product as a result of official protests on "Hell's Angels."

The German law states that if any individual or corporation distributes a film detrimental to German interests, it shall be prohibited from doing business in the country. It is pointed out that Dr. Alfred Hugenberg, member of the Hitler cabinet, is the principal owner of Ufa. His influence is expected to carry great weight in cabinet decisions relative to motion pictures.

9,100 THEATRE ACCIDENT CLAIMS PAID IN 5 YEARS BY BUREAU GROUP

Affiliated Companies Paid Out $1,700,000 in Damages, Declares M. Marvin Berger, After His 1925-1929 Survey

Nine thousand and one hundred claims arising out of motion picture theatre accidents were paid in five years by members of the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters, according to M. Marvin Berger, an attorney of the New York Bar Association, who has completed a study of the situation.

"At all times, but especially in a period of financial stringency, it is vitally important for the careful theatre owner and manager to check up on an important potential source of serious loss—the condition of his plant with reference to possible accidents," said Mr. Berger.

From 1925 to 1929, which includes the latest figures available, companies affiliated with the National Bureau paid out over $1,700,000 on 9,100 claims and even this does not present a complete picture, for the figures do not include claims paid by self insurers or by those casualty companies which do not belong to the bureau. Also, according to Mr. Berger's findings, the figures represent only actual money paid out in settlements before trial and verdicts. It would be impossible, he said, to estimate the loss in such intangibles as good will and reputation, a loss that always follows as a result of such accidents.

"The rule now fairly widely accepted by the courts throughout the country as the standard by which the proprietor is measured, with regard to the care he must give his theatre, involves only the degree of care that would be expected of an ordinarily careful person in his position," Mr. Berger said. "When he has made his theatre as reasonably safe as he can, having due regard to the character of the performance and of his customers, he has done his duty."

"There was a time," he continued, "when the owner was held to the same degree of responsibility as a railroad, that is, he was deemed to insure the absolute safety of his theatre and his customers. This, however, is not the rule today, and the owner is merely held to warrant the reasonable safety of his theatre for the purposes for which it is to be used, except of course as those defects are unseen, unknown and undiscoverable.

Must Be Vigilant

"It must not be understood that once an owner satisfies himself of the reasonable safety of his plant, his duties are at an end. On the contrary, he must exercise a constant and vigilant surveillance. In the words of the New York court of appeals, in a leading case on the subject of theatre negligence, 'where a person invites others to come upon his premises to view an exhibition conducted by him for hire, he warrants the reasonable safety of the place, and by reason of that warranty is not under a passive duty merely, but is under an active duty to guard against all risks which might reasonably be anticipated.'

"The law therefore, in throwing a positive, active duty on the owner to guard against accidents, holds him responsible and attributes to him knowledge of the condition of the theatre and its fitness for the accommodation of crowds, and this duty extends to the acts of his employees while they are engaged in running the theatre.

Reasonable Care Required

"From a reading of the numerous cases on the subject of theatre accidents, it would seem that seats, floors and staircases are the most prolific sources of accidents. On the subject of proper maintenance of seats the supreme court of the State of Connecticut said, in refusing to sustain a verdict awarding a theatre patron damages for injuries sustained by sitting on a defective seat, 'the lessee did not insure the absolute safety of the theatre seats; it, by its invitation to its guests, assumed the duty toward them of exercising reasonable care to see that the seats were in reasonably safe condition for its guests. It performed this duty by having its servant examine the seats each day and report their condition, and thereafter repairing the defective ones.'

"A number of cases involve injury caused by the patron stepping down from a raised seat to a poorly lighted aisle, several inches lower. In connection with proper maintenance, the owner should investigate and discover whether his duties with respect to any particular type of equipment are defined by law in the form of a state statute or municipal ordinance.

The Patron's Responsibility

"Practically all courts emphasize the rule that a patron has the right to assume that the theatre premises are in a reasonably safe condition for use and that he can enter the theatre without incurring any risk which might have been reasonably anticipated by the owner. In so doing, the courts tend to hold the patron to a lighter degree of responsibility than they would if he were a pedestrian on the streets. The patron can't be held to have assumed any risks unless he knew of the defective condition and the consequent danger or unless the defective condition was so obvious that an ordinarily prudent person would have observed the condition and appreciated the danger.

"Not only may the owner become liable in damages for an accident happening as the result of a defect in equipment, but also as the result of failure to provide necessary equipment. The failure to keep a light burning in a dark passageway in the theatre, failure to anticipate the gathering of crowds and to make safe provision for entry and exit and emergencies may mean a suit for damages.

"It is a common belief that by leasing a piece of property, the lessor becomes free from responsibility as to any accidents that may take place after the lease has been signed. While this may be generally true, it is not so in the case of a theatre or other building used for exhibition purposes."

Animal Pictures A Current Cycle

Animal or adventure pictures, or both, are currently occupying the attention of practically all major companies, since one or two features of the type established unusual grosses throughout the country. Universal heads the list with "The Big Cage," featuring the trained wild animals of Clyde Beatty, and "S. O. S. Iceberg," adventure film being produced by Dr. Arnold Fanck in the far north.

Paramount has "Murders in the Zoo" and "King of the Jungle." A Fox company is filming "Man Eater" in the jungles of the Straits Settlement. The Jesse L. Lasky production for Fox, "Zoo in Budapest," has an animal background. Radio is offering "King Kong," a Merian C. Cooper production concerning a mammoth ape. Ernest B. Schoedsack has recently returned from Transjordania with material for a feature tentatively titled "Arabia." MGM will make a sequence to "Tarzan" called "Tarzan and His Mate," and again featuring Johnny Weismuller and Maureen O'Sullivan. Warner has "Untamed Africa," actually produced in the jungle; Monogram has a studio production, "Jungle Bride," and numerous independent features and short subjects are to be offered.

Lawton Acquires Cohan For Straight Film Policy

The Major Theatre Operating Corporation, of which Stanley W. Lawton is president, has taken over the George M. Cohan theatre, former legitimate house on Broadway at 42d street, New York. A policy of first run motion pictures at popular prices is planned.

Mr. Lawton, at one time managing director in charge of theatre operation for the Keith-Albee circuit for a period of 15 years, and more recently engaged in Hollywood production, will personally supervise the house. He announced as the intention of his company the acquisition of other houses.

Three Freed in Kaplan Case

Dismissal of a coercion charge against three of 21 members of projectionists' Local 306 was granted this week in New York general sessions court by Judge Nott. The three are George Williams, Harry Busch and Frank Bishop. Richard H. Gibbs, assistant district attorney, earlier had successfully opposed dismissal of the indictment against all defendants, including Sam Kaplan, deposed president of the local, but Judge Nott held the coercion charge had not been proved against the three. Trial of the remaining 18 continued.

Columbia has completed a feature, "Mussolini Speaks," picturing the high lights of the career of the Italian dictator.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Neligh, Neb.

DEAR HERALD:

If the earth had been made flat instead of round, the range of vision of those who say radio is having no effect on motion picture box office receipts would have had a wider scope, but since it is round the curvature of the earth limits the perspective from the office window of a skyscraper to about 35 miles, and that is about the dividing line between New York City and the jungles.

To say that the radio has no effect on theatre receipts is to speak without knowledge of the facts. There are probably 25 million people in the United States who are listening to the radio every night. We believe that number is too conservative. To expect any great number of people to go out these cold nights and pay money to see "The Kid From Spain" when Eddie Cantor is putting on a program on the radio and they can sit at home in a warm room and hear the program for nothing, is expecting too much. They won't do it, Ellsworth, they won't do it.

When Baron Munchausen, Ed Wynn, Captain Henry's "Show Boat," Amos 'n' Andy and other headliners put on their programs the box offices of this country get a slap right on the nose, don't think they don't, for they do.

And now they are putting on skits and continued stories, murder thrills and the like, and do you think you could dog our wife away from the radio? And she is pretty much of a movie fan, too, and she is only one of the 25 million.

Personally, we are probably a lone sheep in that 25 million, which would prove that this is a very enlightened country, as one out of 25 million is a mighty small percentage of illiteracy, but we know nothing that would send us to the bughouse sooner than to have to sit night after night and hear them exploit breakfast foods, gasoline, shaving cream, tooth paste, coffee, cure-all dope and other things of less importance, and on top of all that they punish us between drinks with jazz orchestras and radio crooners. Probably too much commercialism will eventually sour the public stomach. We've had acidosis for some time.

It is reported that they are charging admission to the principal broadcasting stations and that the auditoriums are entirely too small and they have to turn people away. We judge this is true from the applause we hear when these programs are rendered, but we'd like to ask you if you know of any place where they are crowding one another away from the box office window of the theatres?

As we see it from the sagebush out in the jungles, the best way to combat the effect of the radio on theatre attendance is for the producers to make pictures with sufficient drawing power to pull the public away from the radio. One way that might help some would be to not permit their stars to broadcast. It wouldn't be considered good business for the manager of a theatre to go up to the opposition house with a megaphone and shout, "Hey, folks, come on up here, here is where the big show is."

Trying to drive people into the theatres nowadays is about like putting cowitch on a bull's back and trying to drive him into the corral. It can't be done; he won't drive, he'll curl his tail over his back and away he will go for the open spaces. We've tried it.

Maybe the writers know what they are talking about, maybe, and maybe we are crazier than a bedbug, maybe, but we thought it wouldn't do any hurt to tell you about it.

A Chicago widow has brought suit against another woman for a million dollars for alienation of her husband's affections. Good gosh, there never was a husband in the world whose affections were worth five cents on the dollar of that amount. If we were the trial court we would tell that woman if she couldn't conduct herself in a manner to hold her husband's affections it was just too bad for her. The case is dismissed and the clerk will call the next case.

In giving testimony before the senate "prosperity" hearings, Bernard M. Baruch, a New York investment banker, said, first, "There should be adequate provision against human suffering." Good, we are for it. Then again he said, "There should be a double-barrel plan for farm relief." Fine business; "double-barrel" is right, and they should pull both triggers at once. Further along in the investigation he suggests the issuance of tax exempt bonds bearing 3 per cent interest with a provision to levy taxes to provide for the interest and the amortization of the bonds. Sure thing. If Barny has a bale of those tax exempt bonds he wants to know that the interest will be paid and the bonds redeemed when due. Who wouldn't? He proposed that these bonds be used to pay off farm mortgages. Farmer Jones takes the floor to inquire just how he is to get his mitts on those bonds with which to pay off his mortgage.

Commenting on this, Arthur Brisbane said: "If this country had the courage of a mouse and the sense of a grasshopper, it would immediately put an end to all tax exemptions. It would also call in ten billions of twenty-odd billion Government bonds now outstanding, pay for them with nice, new currency, save four hundred million dollars a year in interest, and say to the former owners, 'Here's your money.' The Government's promise to pay is as good on that green currency as it is on those yellow bonds; go ahead and spend it or do without interest. That would put into circulation ten billion of nice new currency perfectly good, and that is what the country needs." HOT DOG, guess Art told 'em something then. Whenever Arthur takes a crack at the nail he hits it right on the head.

A Nebraska farmer who wanted a 1933 license for his car sent the amount for the license to the county treasurer with the following note:

"Hello Burley: Here are two pigs at $2.00 each, 40 quarts of milk, 10 chickens and five old cocks, a total of eight bucks, for which give me permission to drive my $6.75 can for another year. Depression is sure hell."

Walter Winchell says that the vacation boats to Nassau serve beer for 6 cents per glass. Will someone please tell us where Nassau is and where we will find the dock? We haven't had a vacation in seven years.

Walt also says that the average American citizen earning $3,000 a year pays $250.00 in taxes. Well, that's all right, but what we would like to know is what became of our other $2,750.00, it's gone, too.

He also says that Al Jolson has a brother-in-law in Yonkers by the name of Cantor. That's nothing. We have two full brothers here in our town; one's name is Crone and the other is Johnson.

Newton D. Baker Is Named Counsel For Broadcasters

Newton D. Baker, who was secretary of war in Wilson's cabinet, has taken over a specially created post as counsel for the National Association of Broadcasters to represent them in difficulties arising out of their recent license agreement with the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. The Association is understood to have asked Mr. Baker to serve in much the type of capacity in the broadcasting field that Will H. Hays occupies in the motion picture industry.

Copyright royalties, radio broadcasting and license agreements have been severely attacked in recent weeks by the N. A. B., and in particular by Oswald Schuette, director of copyright activities for the organization.

The copyright situation is in many respects very similar to that prevailing in the motion picture field, but the broadcasters have found themselves aligned with the producers on some phases and with the exhibitors on others. Officials have indicated that sentiment of the Society leans toward the exhibitors.

Mr. Schuette has been sending out various "confidential" bulletins to broadcasting stations in which he decried the practice of "song plugging" by radio. He attacked existing copyright contracts as "grossly unfair, in that the Society is seeking to exact an extravagant royalty from radio stations at the same time its members are asking broadcasters to advertise their compositions, and they have declined to consider a revision of the copyright contract which would release from these royalty demands programs in which no ASCAP music is used."

In his latest bulletin Mr. Schuette declared that the Society was seeking to revise the present contract, "as he had been severely criticized by his own organization for not making a more remunerative deal with the broadcasters." The bulletin goes on to say that ASCAP wants to let the sustaining fee remain as it is, with the radio station paying it, but wants to transfer the commercial tax to the advertiser. Mr. Schuette says the tax is 10 per cent, but ASCAP officials deny that.

E. C. Mills, manager of the ASCAP, is reported to have protested to Mr. Baker against the activities of Mr. Schuette, and Mr. Baker is understood to have warned Schuette at once to cease his operations against the Society.

It has been previously reported that Mr. Schuette also has warned broadcasters against cancellation of their contracts before receiving the text of a revised contract acceptable to them.

Consummation of a new agreement between film producing companies and music publishers on a new contract covering picture rights to copyrighted music is expected this week, John G. Paine, of the Music Publishers Protective Association, announced. It is reported, however, that another contract along the lines of the former license methods to the sound equipment manufacturers is hardly likely to be considered. Direct clearings between the producers and the copyright owner through the offices of the association are planned by Mr. Paine.

A final settlement of claims of music publishers on the royalty payment made to ASCAP last fall by ERPI was reached last week by John G. Paine, who arbitrated claims of the various publishers.

The payment of $825,000 in royalties resulted from arbitration of an original claim of $1,800,000 filed by Mr. Paine. It was prorated among ERPI's producer-licensees and paid over to the Society.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

AMERICAN MADNESS: Walter Huston, Pat O'Brien—one of the best pictures that we have run. It is very timely in this era of bank failures and Huston scores again in his role of harassed banker with an obstinate board of directors. You can lay to it and they will talk about it after they see it.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

THE NIGHT MAYOR: Lee Tracy—A light airy humorous tidbit not to be taken seriously, which our audience seemed to find to their liking. An obvious takeoff on Mayor Jimmy Walker. The weather was too cold to judge its drawing power.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

NO MORE ORCHIDS: Carole Lombard—Fair.—R. W. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

STATE TROOPER: Regis Toomey, Dorothy Knapp —I thought this would be a great Saturday picture but it failed to draw. Those who did see the picture liked it very much, as it was a very good action picture, in all fairness to Columbia. This is the first not to draw 100 per cent. Played Feb. 11.—O. H. Miller, Alamo Theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark. General patronage.

First National

CROONER: Ken Murray, Ann Dvorak—The public are well fed up with the crooners on the radio and this picture is just a plain flop both as title and the theme. No wonder they sit by the radio when they make such plain junk as this one. It will not get a dime in a small town for they panned it plenty the first night and hence it did a nose dive the second and third nights. Another argument for abolishing block booking. Let it lay if you can get out from under it. The title itself kills it to start with and the only redeeming feature to it is the music.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson, Bebe Daniels—Another big hit from First National, the company that is making the good ones this year. When you play "Silver Dollar" you have a show on your screen that will cause them to go out and talk to their friends about the swell picture they saw last night. Robinson is a poor draw for us here, but this one drew average business and there are many in town who now wish that they had seen it when they had the chance, even though they do not like Mr. Robinson's style of acting. Played Feb. 15-16. Running time, 78 minutes.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson—One of the biggest disappointments and the toughest nut we ever had to grind through the second night. The spectacle of this little squat, swarthy man with the insane laugh, trying to be convincing in the role of a financial giant, by means of his ridiculous braggadocio, was pathetic. When he wasn't boasting, he would yell "I'll buy everyone a drink" and that seemed to be the signal for everyone to uncork their best yells. If that constitutes entertainment then we are no judge. Played Feb. 8-9. Runningtime, 84 minutes.—E. D. Hilsinger, Liberty Opera House, Marathon, N. Y. Small town and country patronage.

THREE ON A MATCH: Joan Blondell, Warren William—This one has the drawing power at box office even though it's a very poorly made affair in my opinion, but the patrons seemed to think it very good so maybe I'm wrong. Anyway, it drew 20 per cent better than average business on a very bad rainy night. Has plenty of star names to advertise. Played Feb. 14. Running time, 64 minutes.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

20,000 YEARS IN SING SING: Spencer Tracy, Bette Davis—Here is a new type of "The Big House" story, and it's a pip. We ran it three days, the first picture to get a three-days showing here in over a year. It opened fair on Friday, drew better on Saturday and did big on Sunday, and that is the true test of a box office picture. We got behind this one with plenty of advertising of all kinds, and it drew and pleased 100 per cent. When you play this picture go the limit to sell it to your public. It's a very clean picture, no horror stuff of any kind. Played Feb. 10-11-12. Running time, 81 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

TWO SECONDS: The Herald-World should have a section devoted to "What the Picture Did 'To' Me" for pictures like this. Wonderful acting on the part of the stars; however, the story leaves a bad taste. Absolutely not for children. Played the Notre Dame vs. So. California football game with this which was the only asset to the program. Played Feb. 9-11. Running time, 68 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

IN this, the exhibitor's own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

FACE IN THE SKY: Spencer Tracy, Marion Nixon—Very good.—R. W. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Joan Bennett, Spencer Tracy —With roads, streets and sidewalks blocked with snow it's very hard to tell what box office appeal a picture has. However, the handful who came enjoyed this pair. Several uncalled for smutty situations but they seemed to enjoy it. Those who did not like it walked out, high-hats of course. Lots of wisecracks. Played Feb. 13-15. Running time, 78 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tracy, Joan Bennett —Sure fire entertainment for the masses. Tracy is excellent and Bennett is fine. This will come as near pleasing 100 per cent as anything you have used in the past few months.—Gerald Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglen, Greta Nissen —A new departure in rackets and the colleges have a lot to learn about cheering sections. They spelled the name of the college on the southern exposures of a bevy of girls. Certainly very effective from the audience viewpoint. It is an impossible story and the imagination has to be stretched a lot. Some liked it and some didn't. But that is the case with most pictures.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglen, Greta Nissen—Greatly disappointed in this one. Did not draw film rental and did not please. No one likes McLaglen. The show will please men better than women but there is something wrong with it, too rough or foolish, anyway they panned it. Played Jan. 10.—H. J. Eagan, American Theatre, Wautoma, Wis. Rural patronage.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglen, Greta Nissen—Did not draw business in our town. Too much impossible hokum. This picture is not what it's cracked up to be as far as the publicity Fox gave this is concerned. Patrons just will not fall for this impossible stuff and the sooner Fox realizes this the better off the exhibitor will be. Just another lot of film wasted was the average remark of our patrons. Played Jan. 16-18. Running time, 65 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

SECOND HAND WIFE: Sally Eilers, Ralph Bellamy—Fair.—R. W. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

SIX HOURS TO LIVE: Warner Baxter, Miriam Jordan—Only the superb acting of Baxter saves this unpleasant picture of reincarnation. He is wonderful in it but it is not the type that this star should appear in. But it may be that Fox realized that only he could put it over and make them like it. Why they don't give this star that has no equal in an action western picture some more hits like "Arizona Kid" is beyond me when the producers know that they want action. When I think back over his fine role in "Daddy Long Legs" and see him in this one I didn't think that they are giving him the breaks to keep him popular.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SIX HOURS TO LIVE: Warner Baxter, Miriam Jordan—Another impossible plot, a picture that absolutely did not appeal in our community. Can't imagine where Fox gets the idea that this is entertainment. Let's hope this is the last of the worst pictures to be made by Fox this year as this with "Chandu" and "Rackety Rax" certainly fall below Fox's standard of pictures. Played Jan. 23-25. Running time, 78 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Had we known the weather we were going to experience and if tying up on a title means anything in advertising, we have packed them in on this regardless of the 40 below weather and the worst storm in this section in 30 years. A very nice show that pleased those who came. Give this pair the right kind of story and they always appeal out here. Played Feb. 6-8. Running time, 78 minutes. —G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—A very fine little picture, in which they introduce a new star, "Peppy the Monk," and from first to last he steals the show from Gaynor and Farrell. I suggest that Fox sign him to a long term contract. He is a great actor. We have shown every picture that Gaynor or Farrell has ever made, and they are slowly but surely losing their drawing power. This one did very poor for us. Drew just about what any fairly good picture would draw on same dates. Played Feb. 12-13. Running time, 75 minutes.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—A type of picture that will please everyone. The acting very good. Not the best that these stars have turned out. But nevertheless it drew more than average. Farrell did not have so much to do but he did it well. They sure make a fine team. Give us some more. Played Jan. 1-2-3. Running time, 78 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—Drew better than average business. This is a great Rogers town and I look forward to showing his pictures. However, I think it is time for them to give him a new plot, other than the good samaritan to the younger generation. Played Feb. 12-13.—O. H. Miller, Alamo Theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark. General patronage.

WILD GIRL: Joan Bennett, Charles Farrell—Too bad Fox used this title for it is misleading. Not so good for us, as our patrons do not care for this type of picture. Bennett, Farrell and Bellamy are not suited for such stories, but they do good work. Should please in many situations, but one patron asked us if, by any chance, Mack Sennett had produced it. That tells our story. Played Feb. 3-4. Running time, 74 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

WILD GIRL: Joan Bennett, Charles Farrell—As fine an outdoor picture as we have ever shown. Comments on this were all good, but we made the mistake of showing it on Saturday when they expect a western and it failed to draw our regular Saturday business. This picture is good for any day in the week, and should be given extra advertising. Played Feb. 11. Running time, 78 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

Freuler

THE FIGHTING GENTLEMAN: William Collier, Jr.—A good cast in a sweet picture. Direction, photography and sound excellent. Played Sunday to good business and pleased audience.—T. Johnson, Van Der Vaart Theatre, Sheboygan, Wis. General patronage.

MGM

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY: Jackie Cooper—A splendid picture, the kind you are glad to present to your patrons. Has everything that spells entertainment, but failed to pull above average business. Poor title, appropriate enough for picture, but lacks appeal. Played Feb. 13-14. Running time, 78 minutes. —M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

FAITHLESS: Tallulah Bankhead, Robert Montgomery—Ho Hum! Leo, the MGM lion, must have been yawning and this one escaped his notice. It is hereby nominated to top the list of the ten worst pictures, and there will be plenty of seconds to that motion. No business and no wonder. Lay off and save on apologies. Played Feb. 12. Running time, 84 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines, Madge Evans—Good picture with lots of action and wisecracks. A boat race in the last reel that brings them onto the edge of the seats. Pleased our patrons. Played Feb. 19-20.—Gerald Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: Greta Garbo, John Barrymore—Pleased the majority of our patrons and after all they are the ones to be satisfied. Drew a fairly good business considering the prior runs, but not enough extra to justify calling it a "Special," in any sense of the word. Great cast but Garbo came in for plenty panning while Lionel Barrymore seemed the favorite of our patrons. He's great, as is the rest of the cast, and they are all big names. Played Feb. 5-6-7. Running time, 114 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: All star—Not a small town picture, will please 50-50, but play it as it will get the white collars talking about your theatre. This picture almost put me out of business. I offered the salesman the receipts for the entire engagement and I would have been money ahead if he had accepted. But at that I am not sorry that I played it.—John Depaoli, Holtville Theatre, Holtville, Cal. Small town patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler, Polly Moran—We thought it Dressler's best to date. Entertainment from start to finish and what a finish. Good for your best days. Played Feb. 12-13.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler—Very good Dressler picture and will please. Zero weather caught us with this one and killed what business we might have had. Feb. 9-10.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

RED DUST: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow—Although we advertised this as not a picture for children, there was nothing offensive and what there might have been would certainly have gone over their heads. A very good picture. Another show that lives up to the reputation of good old Leo. They'll like this one, just get them in. Played Jan. 30-Feb. 1. Running time, 73 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

RED DUST: Jean Harlow, Clark Gable—These stars will pull in a few extra admissions. Gable takes the part of a cad. The same old story from the perverted master minds of production. The type of picture you will not buy after the Brookhart bill is passed.—Gerald Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

Monogram

THE THIRTEENTH GUEST: Ginger Rogers—One of Monogram's mighty 32, poor sound, and very poorly acted. This company had better time their pictures to the 1933 times, as this picture reminded me of a fair 1929 talkie. The sound is terrible. Your patrons will walk out asking you what's the matter with your operator. As I am the operator, this makes me sore.—John Depaoli, Holtville Theatre, Holtville, Cal. Small town patronage.

Paramount

A FAREWELL TO ARMS: Gary Cooper, Helen Hayes—This may go over in the cities but out here in the small towns it draws more criticism than comments. The acting is fine in it but the story is disgusting. At least it proved that way for me and I would advise you to see it before you book it. The first one from Paramount that did not click for me. Running time, 78 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

THE BIG BROADCAST: Stuart Erwin, Bing Crosby—As they all say, this draws and pleases quite generally. The story connected with it is very poor but then you cannot expect a plot with a show of this kind. The stars are good and they please. Played Jan. 18.—H. J. Eagan, American Theatre, Wautoma, Wis. Rural patronage.

THE BIG BROADCAST: Stuart Erwin, Bing Crosby—All that is praise could be mentioned about this picture as it certainly pleased 100 per cent. Although we had a very bad break in weather, Paramount can certainly be complimented for this production. Played Jan. 26-28. Running time, 86 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

THE BIG BROADCAST: Radio stars, Stuart Erwin, Lelia Hyams—A wow! Had to stick out the SRO sign for the first time in months. Business 200 per cent and the picture pleased everyone. Played Jan. 22-23. Running time, 80 minutes.—W. R. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich—Take Dietrich at her best, give her two lovers like Cary Grant and Herbert Marshall, a youngster like Dickie Moore, given plenty of footage, all expertly blended and a happy ending, you are sure to please the fans. The coldest spell in 15 years prevented any business to speak of.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

BROKEN WING: Lupe Velez—Although this picture was rather old I played it at the request of several patrons. I am glad I did as it drew a rather good crowd. The picture is of the program class and nothing extra. Played Feb. 3-4. Running time, 85 minutes.—W. R. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

DANCERS IN THE DARK: Miriam Hopkins, Jack Oakie, George Raft—Booked this a couple of days before showing, account pulled a booking. If you have not played it, spot it in. Hopkins sings "St. Louis Blues" and does a good job of it. Played Feb. 9-10.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THE DEVIL IS DRIVING: Edmund Lowe, Wynne Gibson—This is a good snappy feature. Well acted with a convincing plot that held interest all the way. Played Feb. 10-11. Running time, 63 minutes.—E. D. Hilsinger, Liberty Opera House, Marathon, N. Y. Small town and country patronage.

EVENINGS FOR SALE: Herbert Marshall, Sari Maritza—Entertaining picture that will please. Maritza looks like a comer. Sari, we would appreciate a picture for our lobby. Played Feb. 12-13.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HOT SATURDAY: Cary Grant, Nancy Carroll—Did not seem to satisfy. Looked as if hastily thrown together. Just anything to make eight reels and give Grant a chance to show up with his mistress, whom he dismissed with a ten thousand dollar check when he sighted Carroll. Then he turns noble after Nancy has had a lot of trouble with small town gossip and over amorous or jealous boy friends. In a fast fifty-foot finish he decided to marry Nancy when she would have gone with him regardless. Stars did the best they could with Paramount's idea of a story. Played Feb. 19-20.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll—Nice picture. Did fair business for me. Running time, 73 minutes. —Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: All star—The box office champ for my theatre. Drew better than "The Big Broadcast," which is saying something. Pleased all, young and old.—John Depaoli, Holtville Theatre, Holtville, Cal. Small town patronage.

LADY AND GENT: George Bancroft, Wynne Gibson—Here is one swell picture. One that will please the majority. I did not do over average on it as I had basketball competition, but I did not have to hid from the patrons who did see it as they passed out. Played Jan. 27-28. Running time, 80 minutes.—W. R. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

MADAME RACKETEER: Alison Skipworth, George Raft—I was a little afraid of this one but am glad that I ran it. Pleased above average and is a corker for the small town. Played Jan. 21. Running time, 72 minutes.—W. R. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook, Frances Dee—Just as other exhibitors have said this is a crackerjack, in fact, the best Paramount for months and they have had some good ones. There is mystery, romance, action and the best all round comedy in any feature for years. This is what I call entertainment plus and better than a dozen socalled specials. Played Dec. 28.—H. J. Eagan, American Theatre, Wautoma, Wis. Rural patronage.

NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook, Frances Dee, Gene Raymond—Another fine picture from Paramount. If you can get them in they'll like this one. Those we had praised this one highly. Played Feb. 2-4. Running time, 78 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West, Cary Grant—West is excellent in the part she portrays but in these times the picture has no place. Am surprised that such a picture would be released by any producing company. It is a picture of the Bowery. No more like this for me if I know it. Played Feb. 14-15.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—It will please the adults, especially those that have lived in the time the picture depicts. Tell the kids to come some other time. Played Feb. 11.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

THUNDER BELOW: Tallulah Bankhead, Charles Bickford—This picture was a fine flop so far as the story goes. Photography and sound excellent. Was very poor drawing card and business poor. Played Jan. 15-16. Running time, 69 minutes.—W. R. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

TONIGHT IS OURS: Fredric March, Claudette Colbert—Excellent little picture. It was a pleasant surprise as I did not expect much as to entertainment but it was chockfull of it. Do extra advertising and get the money. Bad weather, no business. Played Feb. 7-8.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TONIGHT IS OURS: Claudette Colbert, Fredric March—Very good entertainment. One situation rather suggestive and could have been left out without affecting the story. I may be wrong, but I rather doubt if the average patron cared to be told that March spent the night with Colbert. Played Feb. 4.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Herbert Marshall, Miriam Hopkins, Kay Francis—A slow draggy plot so thickly interspersed with "Messieurs and Madames" as to be practically unintelligible to the average audience. Marshall gives a marvelous imitation of a dead man. Is that posture he assumes the masculine version of the debutante slouch? Maurice Chevalier might get away with this sort of rot, but not this Marshall lad with the shoe button eyes and the turned up nose. Played Feb. 17-18. Running time, 81 minutes.—E. D. Hilsinger, Liberty Opera House, Marathon, N. Y. Small town and country patronage.

UNDER COVER MAN: George Raft, Nancy Carroll—Patrons seemed to like this tale of the police department under cover man, who was searching for his father's murderer. Both Raft and Carroll did clever work.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

WILD HORSE MESA: Randolph Scott—Played this one on bargain night and it drew a large crowd. Pleased everyone. Played this with the opening chapter of "Last Frontier" which seems to be a very good serial, and the combination brought me the biggest crowd I've had on midweek in many a moon.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

RKO

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT: John Barrymore—Advertised a four-star Liberty picture and the three that read Liberty magazine—my cashier, my doorman and myself—believe that Liberty should hire someone else to write up their reviews. This is a fair picture. No box office. Will please about 50 per cent.—John Depaoli, Holtville Theatre, Holtville, Cal. Small town patronage.

BIRD OF PARADISE: Dolores Del Rio, Joel McCrea—A picture that will go over in any small town and has good drawing power. Did 10 per cent better than average Sunday and Monday business. The scenery in this picture is very good and musical background tends to make this picture outstanding. Played Jan. 29-30. Running time, 80 minutes.—W. R. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE: (Frank Buck)—Boys, here is a box office natural. I advertised this one extensively and was well paid as it broke all house records for over a year. Most of my patrons thought that the picture was faked but all said they enjoyed it anyway so I guess that is all that counts. Played Feb. 5-6. Running time, 70 minutes.—W. R. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho Small town patronage.

THE CONQUERORS: Richard Dix, Ann Harding—For some reason this picture did not pull for us. It is a splendid production, that has received far too much adverse criticism in the fan magazines, which may be the answer. Certainly, it deserves far better notices, for it is almost an epic in story and production, and it will please, if you can get them in. Do not make comparisons with "Cimarron," for this one can be put over on its own merits. Played Feb. 1-2. Running time, 82 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

THE HALF-NAKED TRUTH: Lee Tracy, Lupe Velez—A ribald, tawdry comedy too noisy to be enjoyable. Highly improbable plot but its speed and action undeniable. Velez is a cute little monkey and Tracy is acceptable. But when it comes to slapping his women around he's no James Cagney. There is a certain element in every community that will enjoy this one. Played Feb. 15-16. Running time, 75 minutes.—E. D. Hilsinger, Liberty Opera House, Marathon, N. Y. Small town and country patronage.

HELL'S HIGHWAY: Richard Dix—Dix is good in this story of the prison road camps, but picture is rather strong and too brutal to be entertainment. Not the type our patrons care for, and a cold night did not help, so the box office suffered. Played Feb. 8-9. Running time, 63 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. General patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Wheeler & Woolsey—For the fans that are not tired of this pair, it will go over good. It is a real good comedy with lots of laughs. Played Jan. 12.—H. J. Eagan, American Theatre, Wautoma, Wis. Rural patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey—We played this picture Sunday and Monday against zero weather and the picture done remarkable business in spite of the zero weather. It is the funniest picture we have run for a long time. House in uproar from start to finish. Positively one of their best. Don't be afraid to step on this one as it will do plenty of business at the box office and that's what counts. The "Millionaire Cat," a knockout two-reel comedy, played with the above feature attraction.—L. J. Bennett, Rialto Theatre, Pekin, Ill. General patronage.

LUCKY DEVILS: Bill Boyd, Dorothy Wilson—About the "movie man stunt" but do not let your patrons know this as they will expect something thrilling and be disappointed. Two or three slight thrills in this one. Was just another picture to our patrons.—Gerald Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

MEN OF AMERICA: Bill Boyd, Dorothy Wilson—Plenty of action and semi-western semi-gangster and the mixture was not so bad. This girl Wilson is a newcomer and she is plenty of good. The audience liked her and she carried the supporting role like an old trouper.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

PHANTOM OF CRESTWOOD: All star—Lay off this one. I don't care how much radio advertising this picture received, it is still not worth it. It surely is no drawing card and pleased only a few. Second day and I had only the house employes. Played Feb. 10-11. Running time, 77 minutes.—W. R. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

RENEGADES OF THE WEST: Tom Keane—I take my hat off to Keene, he is well liked by all, and if RKO gives him the proper support, this boy will be the biggest western star in business. This is a dandy western, well-made and directed, and it should please 100% the horse opera fans, and they are legion.—John Depaoli, Holtville Theatre, Holtville, Cal. Small town patronage.

ROCKABYE: Constance Bennett, Joel McCrea—In my opinion the finest actress in Hollywood was given a mighty poor story for her great talents. It's not a bad picture and it's not a great picture but it's a fairly good picture that pleases most of the women and the men do not care for it a little bit. Our business was off 50% on this one. They must have known in advance that it was not so hot. Played Feb. 8-9. Running time, 75 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

SADDLE BUSTER: Tom Keene—Very good western. The first one for me of this star. Hope the rest are as good.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

SECRETS OF THE FRENCH POLICE: Gwili Andre, Frank Morgan—One of the best mystery pictures we have had this year. Entertaining, well acted by a competent cast, different and therefore refreshing to patrons satisfied with snappy love histrionics. Played Feb. 6-7. Running time, 58 minutes.—E. D. Hilsinger, Liberty Opera House, Marathon, N. Y. Small town and country patronage.

STATE'S ATTORNEY: John Barrymore—You can always depend on a Barrymore picture to be good and this one was very good. Pleased all that came to see it but did the worst Sunday and Monday business in four months. I guess it doesn't matter how good a picture is just so long as it is a drawing card. I have got my largest crowds on a poor picture just because of a good title. Played Feb. 12-13. Running time, 79 minutes.—W. R. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

Universal

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien, Ralph Bellamy—Universal can be proud of this one. The finest air picture to date. Lots of action, thrills and comedy. Great for all the family. No business for us, due to bad weather. Played Feb. 10-11. Running time, 87 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. General patronage.

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien, Ralph Bellamy—A very good air picture. Some fine stunt flying in this one, also some great trick shots, and plenty of thrills from start to finish. If your patrons are not fed up on air pictures this one will do business, but the people here have had all the air they want, and we did below average for the two days. Played Jan. 21-22. Running time, 83 minutes.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien—Played in zero weather. So got an unfair break on this one. Exceptionally good picture for its type. This one contained everything that makes a picture spicy. Good for the whole family. Played Feb. 10. Running time, 82 minutes.—O. H. Miller, Alamo Theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark. General patronage.

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien—Consider this bigger than "Hell Divers," "Hell's Angels" and the rest of the plane pictures. Had the audience out of their seats during the last reel. Universal, give us more like this one and the depression will be over as far as the theatres are concerned.—John Depaoli, Holtville Theatre, Holtville, Cal. Small town patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne, John Boles—Marvelous acting, splendid cast. Here is a real show that will appeal to the greatest percentage of those who see it. Laud it to the skies and step on it as it will back up anything you can say to bring them in. Although our weather was bad out here, those who did see it were pleased 100%. Played Jan. 19-21. Running time, 84 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N.D. Small town patronage.

HIDDEN GOLD: Tom Mix—On an average with the other Mix pictures. Played Feb. 7-8.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

LAUGHTER IN HELL: Pat O'Brien—The Herald would not print what I think of this one. Of course I could be wrong, but would suggest you screen it. Played Feb. 5-6.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

YOU REMEMBER GEORGE GREEN?

I received your reports to fill out for the "What the Picture Did For Me" department and regret that I can't fill them out.

Three years ago, in the spring of 1930, we finally had to shut down our theatre and after keeping it closed all spring and summer, and in the fall we opened for a few days with sound pictures and then sold the Gem theatre to W. F. Asimus of Greenriver who is operating it now. Mr. Asimus has a man come in and give pictures every Saturday night. This man makes a round trip of coal camps and ends here on Saturday night.

We regretted to see "What the Picture Did For Me" department close and are glad to see that you have reopened it.

GEORGE L. GREEN,
Greenriver, Utah.

THE OLD DARK HOUSE: Boris Karloff—If your patrons still like the shocker and thriller type of pictures, here is a sweet picture for them. It's well acted and plenty shocking. But our people have had all of this type of picture they care for. There is no way to get them interested in a picture of this type. It's time for the producers to call a halt and stop making them. This one drew very poorly for us. We are sorry that we did not pay for it and set in a picture that people would come out and see. Jan. 31. Running time, 74 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

Warner

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy—Tracy pleased with this picture and my fans are wanting to know how soon they can see him again. Played Sunday afternoon to above average business and we called all those who missed the picture, who were our regular patrons, and told them what they were missing and they came out Monday night to see if we were right. We held it over for an extra day and I believe I could run it again and do above average business on it.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

HARD TO HANDLE: James Cagney—A very pleasing picture, but not another "Winner Take All." If they had not given Ruth Donnelly a good part in this it would have missed bad. She almost steals the picture from Cagney. Play this one and give it a boost. We did not do business with it even with extra advertising. It seems that my people would have been satisfied if Cagney had taken a six-year vacation instead of only six months. They were just not interested. Played Jan. 28-29. Running time, 76 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

HAUNTED GOLD: John Wayne—Absolutely the best western ever shown at this theatre. Any exhibitor would do well on this western. Enough mystery to keep the audience interested and plenty comedy to keep them laughing. The kids are wild about it. Blue Washington and "Duke" steal the show. Played Feb. 17-18.—Alpha Lee Murphy, Ritz Theatre, Olney, Tex. Small town patronage.

I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG: This is already sold to the public and if you do not make some money with it you might as well close up shop and join the back to the farm movement. A darn good picture and sure does please 'em.—Gerald Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

THE MYSTERY OF THE WAX MUSEUM: Lionel Atwill, Glenda Farrell—An excellent production from every standpoint. The mystery and horror theme is well balanced with an abundance of comedy, wisecracks, fast chatter by Glenda. I saw this at a screening and would say it is 100% entertainment. All color and a knockout picture.—Gerald Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

ONE WAY PASSAGE: William Powell, Kay Francis—Played this picture Sunday-Monday. Drew average business, not as much as expected, as the picture was heralded as their best. Ending was a disappointment. I find a tragic ending leaves audience with a bitter taste that is not quickly forgotten. Played Feb. 5-6. Running time, 69 minutes.—O. M. Miller, Alamo Theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark. General patronage.

ONE WAY PASSAGE: William Powell, Kay Francis—Very good and seemed to please but our audience bewildered at the ending. Business fair. Played Dec. 18-19-20-21. Running time, 89 minutes. —L. V. Gucker, Dawn Theatre, Hartford City, Ind. General patronage.

SCARLET DAWN: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Nancy Carroll—This will not create popularity for either Fairbanks or Carroll, for the story is weak and highly improbable. Will get by on a double bill or a midnite show, which is the way we played it. Short running time allows for a strong supporting program, in case you play it singly. Pulled plenty for us, but did not satisfy. Played midnight, Feb. 4. Running time, 58 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

SCARLET DAWN: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Nancy Carroll—It seems that a Russian string band got stranded in Hollywood, and that Warner Brothers had some Russian uniforms on their hands and Doug., Jr., was not doing anything right at that time, and he also had some very pretty Russian style pajamas, so they decided to hire the string band and make a picture, and "Scarlet Dawn" is the result. It's not good by a long shot, and I have shown quite a few during the past year that were a lot worse. We ran it for a small admission and got by. Perhaps you can. Played Feb. 11. Running time, 78 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

TWO AGAINST THE WORLD: Constance Bennett—The picture is just fair, either good or bad, just so-so-, but it drew above average and of course we are pleased. It just goes to show that Bennett is still popular in spite of the fact that she made only one outstanding picture in the last year. Stars do draw regardless of good or bad stories, and as long as we can break even under present conditions it is about all we can expect. This picture will not disappoint your patorns so run it just because Bennett is in it. Played Jan. 29.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town patronage.

Short Features

Educational

FREAKS OF THE DEEP: Interesting shots of freak fish found in tropical waters. This "Cannibals of the Deep" series has been far above average. Running time, 9 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore.

MANHATTAN MELODY: Just a reel of views of New York that we have all seen hundreds of times, with a musical accompaniment. Very, very mediocre. —E. D. Hilsinger, Liberty Opera House, Marathon, N. Y. Small town and country patronage.

RADIO GIRL: Terrytoon Cartoon—Extra good. Running time, 7 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore.

THIS GIDDY AGE: Andy Clyde—Not so hot. Clyde rather tiresome and the feminine end of this wasn't even passable, as far as looks were concerned. Just a "rag, a bone and a hank of hair."—E. D. Hilsinger, Liberty Opera House, Marathon, N. Y. Small town and country patronage.

Fox

PIRATE ISLE: Magic Carpet—Not much after running travelogues with an announcer. These are mighty weak.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MGM

CHILI AND CHILLS: Oddity—Very satisfactory filler. Nothing to rave about. A fight between two turtles and a dog killing a snake were interesting.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FREE WHEELING: Our Gang—Little better than previous ones we have run.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HASTY MARRIAGE: Charles Chase—Another good Charley Chase comedy. Running time, 21 minutes.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala.

SCRAM: Laurel-Hardy—Laurel and Hardy did all the laughing. Audience none. Not much of a comedy. —D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SHOW BUSINESS: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—We have not had a good comedy from Metro this season. Recording is poor.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas.

THE SOILERS: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—Good comedy but the poorest that this team has made. Two reels.—Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

THEIR FIRST MISTAKE: Laurel and Hardy—One of the funniest comedies we have played for some time. These two guys are real comedians.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Michigan.

BETTY BOOP'S MUSEUM: Betty Boop Cartoon—Just fair. Running time, 7 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore.

BETTY BOOP'S MUSEUM: Talkartoon—Just a cartoon. Not as good as others. Running time, 1 reel.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Virginia.

BLUE OF THE NIGHT: Bing Crosby—A splendid, high class short subject. You don't have to apologize for showing. If only the studios would start a cycle of such stuff as this, exhibitors would be able to look their patrons in the face as they come out.—E. D. Hilsinger, Library Opera House Theatre, Marathon, N. Y. Small town and country patronage.

BRING 'EM BACK SOBER: Jackie The Lion, "Babe" Kane—A very good comedy. Lots of laughs. Running time, 2 reels.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Virginia.

DANGEROUS FEMALES: Polly Moran, Marie Dressler—This one was made several years ago and Paramount made new prints of it for release this year. Somehow, it did not have the kick it had when we saw it the first time, and the sound was not too good. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore.

THE DENTIST: Extra good.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

THE DENTIST: A good comedy for Saturday night.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DINAH: Mills Brothers—Mills Brothers in a knock-out reel. Feature this and put it on your best dates.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DON'T PLAY BRIDGE WITH YOUR WIFE: Sennett Star—Good two-reel slapstick, showing that bridge battles originated with the cave dwellers and have continued right down the line. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D.

THE LION AND THE HOUSE: Lloyd Hamilton—One of the best comedies we have played from Paramount. Good old fashioned laughs. Running time, 2 reels.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va.

LOUD MOUTH: This comedy is a knock-out and the title is correct. The loud mouth does its work so that ball players cannot do a thing. This is good and run it.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa.

MA'S PRIDE AND JOY: Donald Novis—Great. This boy Novis is surely a great singer, and the public are hungry for music and song. They stay to hear this fellow over the second time. He can't act, but he can sing.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

MY BABY JUST CARES FOR ME: Screen Song—Just so-so. Cartoon portion not much. Singing fair. Dancing good.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE WIVES: Not bad. Not good.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THE RINK: Charlie Chaplin—One or two of these are all right but the fast action and lack of sound except for some wild music that goes with the comedy is not so good. They are back numbers and don't appear to get the laughs as far as this house is concerned.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SHAMPOO, THE MAGICIAN: Roscoe Ates, Hugh Herbert—Better than average. A broad satire on "Chandu, the Magician." Running time, 17 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon.

BOSKO'S PARTY: Bosko Cartoon—A dandy cartoon, with more than the usual laughs. Running time, 7 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore.

Test Film and Signal Locations Discussed

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 162.—(A) What in your opinion constitutes an ideal film splicer? Think this over and be careful. Am seeking the opinion of practical projectionists on this point. Be careful not to omit anything. (B) What do you, as practical projectionists, regard as the best width for film splices? (C) Do you find very narrow splices desirable or objectionable? (D) Tell us, in careful detail, just how the emulsion should be scraped off. That is of course included in Section B of Question No. 161, but I believe the matter to be of quite sufficient importance to justify its treatment as a special item.

At the latest meeting of the Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, held the evening of February 20, a new and very clever device was presented, designed to enable the projectionist to line up all elements of the projector optical train from light source to front end of projection lens, including aperture, with absolute accuracy, was displayed for inspection. The device was evolved under the direction of the Projection Practice Committee. It is a redevelopment of a somewhat similar device used to a very limited extent some years ago. It is hoped it will be made available to all projectionists.

The damage done by studio men using screen illumination far in excess of that used in theatres in their screening room was again discussed. The committee has already made a good start in reducing this evil. The matter lies thus: Studio screening room screens are or have been almost invariably illuminated at from two to three times the illumination values possible to obtain on the much larger theatre screens. Studio men have used this high illumination to judge the proper density of prints, with the result, except only in the theatres able to have the very brightest of screens, that it has been impossible to project properly the dense prints resulting from this absurd practice. Much harm has been done by the practice. It is to be hoped producers will pay heed to the very obvious necessity for passing judgment in the matter of print density when using screen illumination not appreciably higher than that employed by the average theatre. If they do not, they certainly cannot expect their productions to be properly lighted in a very large number of theatres. In fact, in relatively few of them.

Rank carelessness displayed in changeover signal placement came in for a good roast. It is the opinion of the committee that changeover signal marks should be always neither on, nor too close to, vital action in any scene. Of course, that procedure would compel studio men to go to some trouble in locating these marks, but after all if the producer and his satellites are unwilling to go to some trouble to make the perfect projection of his production possible, what earthly right has he to expect projectionists to take much interest in placing them before the public at their highest value?

Said one member of the committee, "Recently while I was projecting 'The Sign of the Cross,' one of the artists was kneeling imploring the aid of heaven. What she actually received was decapitation by a carelessly placed changeover signal mark.

The committee is holding back its proposed work of measuring typical screen illumination until more fully satisfied that it can secure an instrument the readings of which may be depended upon, and which can be used to take all the necessary measurements in the limited time available before or after the show. As soon as this matter is cleared up to the satisfaction of the committee the work will proceed. It is hoped the results will be very helpful in many ways. The committee did take a limited number of screen illumination measurements, which were found to check almost perfectly with measurements made by others in other territories.

Report was made by men saying they had used films immediately following their use in Rockefeller Center theatres, where the prints had their initial run, that changeover signals in the form of circles scratched in the emulsion, apparently with a pin point, were found in all reels. The reporters stated positively that the films came directly from Rockefeller Center theatres, and that they had not been used prior to their run there. This, if true, is disgraceful.

Urges Fight On Perforations

E. C. Van Fradenburg, projectionist at the Valley theatre in Manassa, Colorado, writes that the Valley theatre has been remodeled getting, among other things, new sound equipment. He continues:

"As you know, one who likes projection will surely enjoy installation work, as well as the grief that is bound to go with it. I have wondered if it would be possible for you to compile an index to the Bluebook School. I have a great pile of HERALDS, but find it very difficult to look through them and find some particular thing I may wish to refer to. Fully realizing the fact that the compilation of such an index would be a large task, still I am sure a very large number of men would appreciate it. I would also like to see the BETTER THEATRES articles included, if the task be undertaken.

"Incidentally, I have read with much interest your recent articles regarding the lack of any real need for screen perforation. Go to it! For three years I have been convinced that the perforated screen was a joke, but a very poor one."

The index would be too much of a burden in addition to the work I now have to perform.

As to perforated screens, I need make little further comment. I hold them to be not only needless, but a distinct disadvantage, when all points are considered

Bell and Howell Has New Device

The Bell and Howell Company, Chicago film equipment manufacturer, has developed a new Animation Stand, which the company claims is adaptable for making, in 35 millimeter film, animated drawings, maps, mechanigraphs, producing film slide negatives, photographing titles, as well as the copying of books, documents and records, the last described as a new field for the motion picture camera with single exposure device.

Claimed to be a self-complete unit, the stand is especially recommended by the manufacturer for use in the industrial film laboratory. Provisions for focusing and centering the subject under the camera are claimed to make for reduced cost. The use of a single exposure trigger is said to provide for speedy work and elimination of waste motion. A Bell and Howell Eyemo 35 mm. spring-driven camera is a major part of the Animation Stand. The device is easily demountable, making for portability.

The Silent Camera Subcommittee of the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast this week made sound and photographic tests of a new Bell and Howell camera, designed to eliminate cumbersome blimps used on the set to shield the microphone from camera noises.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

WE'LL TAKE THE CASH!

THREE SWELL SHOWMEN whom we have not seen for almost a year drifted into Club headquarters within the past few days . . . and they've all been hard at work and climbing the ladder. . . . BUT . . . ain't it strange??? . . . although they have been advanced from house managers to positions of district and division supervisors they were not given a penny increase in salary. . . .

Which compels us to soliloquize a bit and wonder whether the added headaches of supervision and nice-sounding titles are really worth while . . . These men were mighty fine managers and operating their former houses on the profitable side of the ledger . . . a man-sized job any day in the week . . . but then they were promoted and now they have . . . instead of one problem . . . anywhere from six to thirty . . . and at no extra pay. . . . So we've decided that as far as we are concerned . . . let the other fella have the title . . . we'll take the cash. . . .

CORNERED H. B. FRANKLIN in his private sanctum the other day and listened to one of the many reasons why this executive is outstanding above so many others. . . . His consideration for the manpower of his organization is one of the keys to his success. . . .

Incidentally . . . H. B. rather mourns the loss of "NOW" . . . the house organ identified with his circuits for so many years . . . and again his reasoning sounded logical to us. . . . He felt it was a warm tie between the distant home office and the men in the field. . . . Wouldn't be surprised to see it start publication again even if we do feel that our own R. T. C. pages can cover much of the same territory. . . .

WHILE VISITING DOWN THE Jersey shore we noticed a familiar looking name above the Traco Theatre in Toms River, New Jersey, and remembered that here was the house operated by our good friend H. M. Hirshblond. . . . We couldn't possibly pass up a chance to pay him our initial visit in his own home town . . . so in we ambled and there stood none other than "H. M." in person . . . and glad we were to see him . . . ditto him to us . . . and although we spent but the briefest of visits we did enjoy seeing a real . . . rare sight . . . one of the most efficient projection booths in the country . . . and we are fully aware of the size of the territory we are covering. . . .

To describe it would be to devote the rest of our limited space here, so we have to tip you off to drop in and visit this fine showman and the modern house he is running. . . . We'll be seeing you again soon . . . Hirshblond. . . .

STILL ANOTHER VISITOR TO headquarters recently was Monty Salmon . . . who looks after the Skouras-Paramount Theatres in Pennsylvania. . . . Monty has always been one of our pet members ever since he joined up with the gang while out on the coast when we first got started. . . . Since then we have watched his progress with keen interest. . . .

O. K. Monty . . . we'll take you up on that invitation to visit your territory as soon as Jack Frost weakens a bit . . . this traveling around the wide open spaces in draughty automobiles is getting kinda tough on the ol' Colonel. . . .

FRED HINDS . . . A THOROUGHBRED exhibitor if there ever was one . . . takes time out to drop us one of those real newsy letters that we love to go through . . . and if he keeps writing them so darned interesting we will be reprinting them on this page and save us the labor of pounding out one week's, "between you and me." . . .

Fred operates out in Whitewater, Wisconsin, . . . a typical situation like thousands of others . . . perhaps that is why his reactions really mean something . . . and one of his most important kicks is about the lack of good musicals from Hollywood. . . . Too much "agony" stuff, says Fred . . . and "Amen," says we. . . . Musicals . . . when served far enough apart . . . are highly profitable menus for most towns. . . . First they tried to jam them down our throats by the dozens . . . and then they stopped them altogether. . . . Tain't fair . . .let's have some good ones soon. . . . To which we heartily agree with Hinds.

BOX OFFICE ACTIVITY showed a decided increase during the past three or four weeks . . . and with average product too . . . which may be taken as an indication that things ARE looking up a bit . . . so . . . in unison with several thousand other exhibs . . . we croon . . . "There's Always a Silver Lining" . . . but of course we're well aware that plenty of silver is just thin plated and begins to tarnish much too soon . . . but here we are mixing optimism with pessimism and that won't do . . . suppose . . . if business is good that we just go on hoping that it stays that way for the balance of the season . . . and so to bed . . . nighty-night . . . pleasant dreams. . . .

LOU METZGER WAGED EFFECTIVE CAMPAIGN ON "SILVER DOLLAR"

Once again we hear from Lou Metzger who handled the "Silver Dollar" campaign when it played the New Spreckles Theatre in San Diego, Cal. Here is his complete campaign:

One hundred and fifty three-sheets were posted a week in advance and 800 sides of fresh can copy was also used. Fifty 24-sheets were used one week in advance before New Year's Eve show. Fifty thousand heralds were distributed the day before opening in the local shopping news.

A tie-up was effected with the local Colorado State Society for a special push to the midnight New Year's Eve show at $1. A special preview was held for officials of the society and newspaper men, who became very enthused with the film and plugged it to members of the society. One of the outstanding stunts of the campaign was having a man dressed in mining garb leading a burro through the streets for three days before the opening. On the burro's back was copy on the picture and also the title in bold lettering.

The picture enjoyed a long build of publicity in the local dailies, weeklies and in the house programs. A reprint of the herald was in the Beacon, another local paper, thus totaling 84,000 distribution. The serialization of the picture was used by the local papers and the small weekly papers came through with plenty of publicity.

A large marquee banner was used and 7,500 folded "Silver Dollar" novelties were given away in the foyer one week in advance. Three huge silver dollar cut-outs were used on three sides of the marquee. A large attractive display of various type metals was used in the foyer together with a display of mining equipment. Candy silver dollars were handed out to patrons in the lobby and proved popular with both the grown-ups and kiddies. Display boards were used in the lobby using facsimiles of old Denver newspapers, in advance. Prominent critics' reviews and Liberty's four-star review were also placed in lobby. A large tinted head of Robinson held an eye-catching place in the lobby.

Smash ads were used before the opening and during run. The midnight show got big plug and a special advertising page with the "San Diego Sun" with hookup advertising.

BONNEY DID GOOD WORK SELLING "BUY AMERICAN" SCHEME

In line with the "Buy American" and "Shop at Home" campaign inaugurated by General Manager Monty MacLevy at the St. Albans Theatre, St. Albans, L. I., N. Y., Jesse T. Bonney, former manager of the State Theatre, another nearby house on the same circuit, followed up his chief's move by rounding up Rockaway merchants for a similar drive.

In return for screen mention one week out of the six weeks' period covered by the campaign, special tickets for customers at the several stores, window cards and mention in lobby, each merchant has agreed to contribute some article valued at approximately $5 each week during the drive, the total of which is valued at about $150.

This is another instance of a manager cashing in on the immense amount of publicity given the "Buy American" movement sponsored by one of the largest national chains of newspapers in the country, and, according to evidence at hand the move is being liberally supported by both community merchants, citizens and neighborhood papers. These days merchants and papers will listen to most any reasonable plan to stimulate sales and it looks as though Bonney, inspired by MacLevy's similar move in another town, used an effective weapon to combat present business conditions.

N. Y. Strand Sold Cagney

Harry Charnas, managing director of Warner-Broadway theatres, New York City, certainly had his staff spread themselves when designing the advance lobby at the Strand Theatre for James Cagney's return picture in "Hard to Handle." The entire lobby was plastered with Cagney hand-lettering, life-size stills and frames, all in keeping with the usual Strand style of letting passers-by know what's going on.

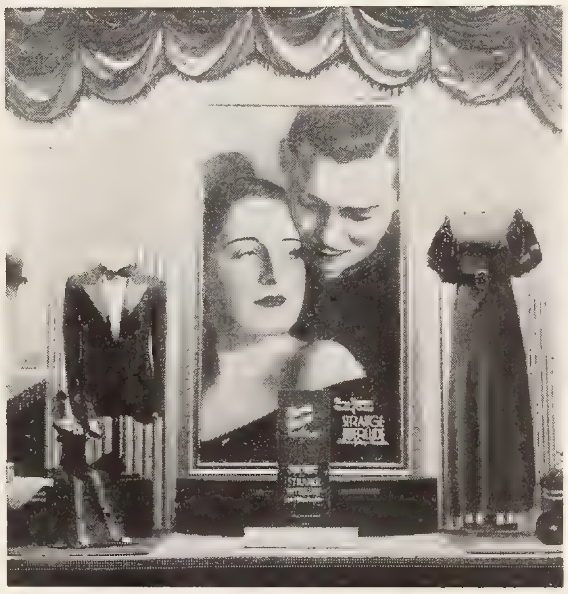
FASHION WINDOW WAS ATTRACTIVE FEATURE CALDWELL PROMOTED

We are able to report that Wally Caldwell, manager of Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, put over the campaign on "Strange Interlude" in his customary, aggressive fashion.

In addition to the extensive coverage always arranged by Wally when exploiting and advertising a picture, this campaign had for one of its features a compelling fashion window in a large department store in the heart of the city. In the accompanying photo you may see the large star oil painting in background, with theatre copy dominating the front-center portion. Other large, framed oil paintings were placed on easels in empty store windows in prominent downtown locations through a tie-up made with a local realty concern.



Additional efforts included use of half-sheet cards with mounted star heads in downtown merchants' windows; display of 125 Neon signs containing 11 by 14 sepias, with title, theatre and playdate copy, in all sections of city; display of mounted six-sheet poster in a big empty window on downtown corner; special 14 by 17 tinted star heads in exclusive women's shoe store, and the usual Caldwell coverage in local and out-of-town newspapers of advertising, stories and art.

NEW LOCATION NOT MUCH OBSTACLE TO SHOWMAN JOHNSON

A glance through a recent issue of a newspaper published down in the home town of Fred Johnson, Reynoldsville, Pa., proves beyond a doubt that this Round Tabler and manager of the Adelphi and Liberty Theatres there is getting a pretty fair shake in the matter of free publicity, front page and otherwise.

In this particular issue there's a front page story on Fred's address on the subject of the motion picture to members of the local Kiwanis Club, and another dealing with lowered adult admission prices at both theatres. Scattered throughout the remaining nine pages are several other write-ups on current and coming attractions.

Most members of this organization will recall that Fred originally hailed from Oil City and only engaged in showbusiness in Reynoldsville several months ago, which is further evidence that a real showman can become a useful and well liked citizen in any town he decides to call home.

UP-STATE SKOURAS HOUSES INTERESTED IN STUDENT TRADE

A Club editorial published a few weeks ago on the subject of "The Growing Generation" inspired C. A. Cabalerro, head of Fox-Skouras theatres in upper New York State, to register all school children in his district between the ages of 12 and 16, according to a report recently made this office.

Up in Little Falls, N. Y., the Rialto Theatre and two other houses in the neighboring cities of Herkimer and Ilion, an Identification Card has been issued by Central N. Y. Theatres. It carried fill-in lines for age, height, color of eyes, hair, sex, weight and name of school attended by the bearer. It is stated in a corner of the card that the bearer is entitled to the privilege of purchasing Children's Admission Tickets. The card also carries lines for signatures of the holder and manager of the theatre.

We understand that the entire up-state circuit is getting behind this move and that so far it has produced very satisfactory results. As the reader will at once conclude, the aim is to educate the "growing generation" in the matter of attending the theatre at a nominal admission during certain ages. We will gladly furnish additional details of the plans as soon as returns come in, but if you are anxious to learn more about this plan now we can refer you to the editorial mentioned above, which appeared in the issue of Nov. 26th, 1932, or else furnish you with the complete details upon request.

The growing generation is an important problem today and Cabalerro is making a smart move in following this example.

EXCHANGE MATS AND ADVERTISING!

Once again we offer an ever-welcome addition to the Club pages—the grouping of specimen ads in which regulation exchange mats are used for illustration in place of art work.

Although busy out in Hollywood, Eddie Hitchcock responded to our request for another series of these ad suggestions, and here you have the first. Another will appear next week and as frequently thereafter as the mails bring us additional layouts.

It is not intended that you use these ad suggestions exactly as they are shown. Remember, they are a combination of portions of exchange mats and the ad ideas of the man who made them up. Your ideas and his may not gibe; yet, if you are at all anxious to find new slants, you will be able to make good use of many of the ideas which Eddie has injected into this layout.

It is hardly fair for several thousand showmen to lean on one man for this type of material. Hitchcock was sport enough to help out and get the series started again; now some of you other showmen, who are making up fine newspaper ads with exchange mats playing an important part, ought to send in several of these layouts. If only a half dozen would respond to this request we could keep the series going for months and at the same time offer a wide variety of ideas in connection with this important and timely subject.

Cullen's Stunt!

When exploiting "Cynara" in Pittsburgh, Pa., Mike Cullen, manager of Loew's Penn Theatre, pulled a smart stunt by arranging a preview of the picture for the head of the drama school of Carnegie Tech, whose word of what's what in entertainment is held in high esteem, both in the city and elsewhere. He made an address to the students and devoted his entire discussion to the direction and workmanship exemplified in the film. A thought worth thinking over if you are situated so as to work it out.

Boucher's Gag!

As a means of exploiting "20,000 Years in Sing Sing," Frank Boucher, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winchester, Ky., mailed out 500 small, neatly printed letters to a selected list of women, stating that the person had been chosen as one greatly interested in superior entertainment and setting forth a few highlights of the film. A critic's card was enclosed and it was asked that the person hand in her reaction to the picture. A cash award was given for the best tab review.

FRED YOUNG SENDS PHOTOS FROM MALANG, JAVA

FROM Malang, Java, Dutch East Indies, where Fred Young manages the Flora Cinema and the Emma Theatre, and also the Capitol Theatre in Pasoeroean, another nearby community, comes a batch of most interesting snap-shots presenting evidence of what he and his associates have been doing to exploit pictures in their far-away country. We've picked out a half-dozen of the snaps for reproduction and will attempt to describe the balance. Readers will agree, we believe, that showbusiness is the same the world over.

Glancing along the top portion of the strip from left to right the first scene is an attractive floral display used to sell the return of James Dunn and Sally Eilers; the next shows a group of youngsters wearing Charlie Chaplin shirts, and the third a combination display for a Cohen and Kelly picture and a war film. Note the tanks and guns in front of the lobby. Following, in order, are views of fronts on "Doomed Battalion," on which the war tank was again used; a truck bally with the "Frankenstein" monster, and a shot of the dirigibles used to sell "Hell's Angels." The other snaps, as we look over them, are more or less duplicates of the foregoing, but offer additional proof that Fred and his gang are on their toes.

Young was born in Semarang, Java, but received his education in New York University and Columbia. For a young fellow of 27 years he holds a responsible position and we're sure his fellow Round Tabler members are in line for further news of how shows are sold in Java. We'll go to work on the material whenever he sends it along.

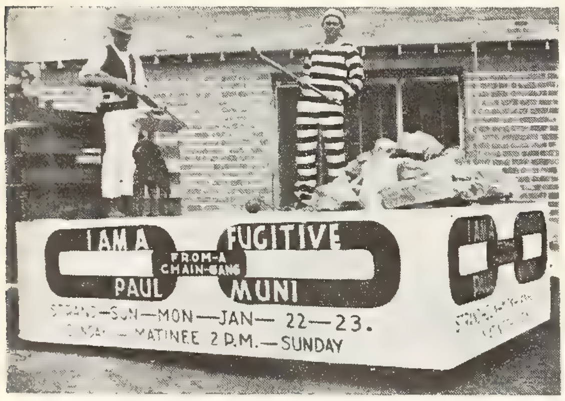
An effective ballyhoo for "I Am a Fugitive" was used by Kenneth Taylor, manager of the Stand Theatre, Uvalde, Texas, when exploiting that picture, by rigging up his truck with a rock-pile, guard with gun and real bloodhound and a convict dressed in the nearest thing resembling regulation prison garb that Ken could design. The ball and chain were authentic and were obtained from the Sheriff of Terrell County, a matter of 200 miles distant. As the photo shows, the guard kept his man covered, the convict pecked away at the rock and the dog did his bit by constantly trying to get to the prisoner as the truck moved through principal streets in the town.



I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG
PAUL MUNI
STRAND—SUN—MON—JAN—22—23.
SUNDAY—MATINEE 2 P.M.—SUNDAY

When finished with the bally the signs on sides of the truck were hung below the theatre marquee at either side of entrance, thus saving construction of another set. This is usual procedure on the part of Taylor and as the cloth is white and thin the signs show up well when placed in front of marquee lights. Several piles of rock were placed along the curb in front of the house and chains were run from pile to pile. Chains also hung from the marquee and the attached iron balls were wind-mill weights, obtainable from any dealer in such supplies. The convict stood alongside of the rocks and did his hammer act.

Getting back to the subject of his uniform again, we might add that the ingenuity of Ken's mother was responsible for the costume. With no regulation garments to draw upon, she took a white jacket and trousers and sewed black stripes around. With no other than a black cap available, she reversed the color scheme and the entire costume appeared to be the latest style in chain gang attire.

Aside from managing the Strand, Ken acts as chairman of the program committee of the Lions Club in his town, has charge of a confectionery store next door to the theatre (it figured in the deal when H. W. Little took over the house), keeps books for both store and theatre and supervises all advertising. All he doesn't have to do is clean up the house, operate and sell tickets. He gets up at about 7 o'clock in the morning and knocks off anywhere from 12 to 1:30 the following night or morning, when Mrs. Taylor manages to snatch a few words of greeting or goodnight with the man she took for better or worse. A fellow has to like showbusiness to put in those hours, and that's just what's the matter with Ken.

Hayman at Wheeling, W. Va.

Herbert Hayman, former Baltimore showman, was recently appointed supervisor of the four Warner theatres in Wheeling, W. Va. Robert T. Kemper will have charge of the Capitol and Victoria; George Otto will manage the Court, and Earl Oschenbein will be at the Liberty.

BILL BROWN GAVE PATRONS A SLANT ON PRISON CAMPS

Further evidence that the fellows on the Randforce Circuit over in Brooklyn, N. Y., are doing things in the way of exploitation is contained in a report on recent activities of William Brown, manager of the Marboro Theatre in the Bensonhurst section of the big borough.

After sitting through a showing of "I Am a Fugitive," Bill decided to give the good citizens of his neighborhood something in the way of a prison camp scene depicted in the film. First he sought out a lumber concern and promoted material to build the prison bunks you see in the accompanying illustration; then he went into conference with the sign shop and arranged to have the background painted to represent the interior of prison sleeping quarters.

Not having any convenient convict camps in Bensonhurst, the toughest assignment was collecting enough props to carry out the general scheme and the Alderman in Bill's district was forced to come to the rescue. The two of them went down to Police Headquarters, secured permission to see the property clerk, and after getting an okay from the Commissioner's office, departed for home with the following articles: 1 loaded cane; 2 brass knuckles; 3 billies; 2 bludgeons; leg irons; a milk can such as allegedly in use in certain camps, and several other interesting gadgets.

The collection may suggest an effective outfit for our own local gangsters, but we have Bill's own word for it that all of the articles are considered the last word in up-to-the-minute prison camp equipment. At any rate, the display was good enough to stir up a lot of interest among potential patrons and to extract words of praise from Louis Frisch, one of the Randforce partners who stopped by to find out what caused all the excitement. Okay to Bill and more power to him. If he doesn't succeed in educating his section of the city in the matter of all sorts of things, it certainly won't be his fault.

BANK THOSE TICKET-SELLING IDEAS IN A MANAGER'S FILE; IT WILL PAY!

At Last! A System That Will Enable All Showmen To File Away Money-Making Ideas; Convenient and Serviceable!

by IRA GLUCKSMAN

IMAGINE having at your finger tips a tried and true stunt to sell any and all pictures. Imagine never being without a storehouse of sales ammunition to meet the emergency of a sudden booking. Picture the advantage of always having at your command the best merchandising minds in the industry.

Idle flight of fancy? Not at all. Yours, all yours, at no cost whatever except for a little effort and some folders necessary to make up and run a simple exploitation file.

There's nothing new about this file idea. Many exhibitors have tried keeping one in the past. Most of them have given up in disgust. Reason? Either they started with no well conceived plan or else they made their file so complicated Sherlock Holmes himself couldn't have found what was wanted.

This article explains a system of keeping a simple selling file. The file is so easy to operate that a few minutes a week will be sufficient to bring it up to snuff. The plan is based upon the author's own experience in keeping just such a file while on the staff of "Publix Opinion," circuit house organ. Essentially this article is very much the same as the one written last year for that publication.

Scope of the File

Unless a good plan of the scope of the file is worked out in advance, it will become muddled, cumbersome, over-complicated, and therefore useless. Personal experience in running a file has led the author to believe that it should be basically split up into the following main headings:

A. EXPLOITATION
B. ADVERTISING
C. PRODUCT
D. BIOGRAPHIES, STILLS, MATS
E. CHILD PATRONAGE
F. STATE ATTRACTIONS
G. SPECIAL OCCASIONS
H. MANAGEMENT

As given here, these divisions are arranged in the order they will probably be referred to most often. In some instances, managers may prefer to rearrange them alphabetically.

No Reason To Waste Valuable Time Hunting For Campaigns Or Ideas That Can Be Kept at Finger Tips Ready For Use!

As you read on, it will become clear why these particular main headings have been selected.

(A.) Exploitation

It is apparent that the main headings will require a certain amount of subdivision. Under "Exploitation" should be the following:

1. Merchant Tie-ups
2. Civic and Community Tie-ups.
3. Contests
4. Ballyhoos.

Into the folder on "Merchant Tie-ups" should go information about arrangements with bakeries, department stores, banks, drug stores, dairies, laundries, newspapers, radio stations, refrigerator dealers, transportation lines, garages, etc., etc.

Under "Civic and Community Tie-ups," put ideas for dealing with police, firemen, Parent-Teacher Associations, American Legion, Safety Council, Army, Y. M. C. A., etc., etc.

Under the folder marked "Contests," should go ideas for conducting all kinds of contests such as Writing, Jingle, Identification, Puzzle, Beauty, Memory, etc.

In the division headed "Ballyhoos," put workable stunts on parades, use of public address system inside and outside the theatre, vehicle ballyhoos, live lobby ballyhoos, street ballyhoos, etc., etc.

So much for the first subdivision under a main head!

Second Subdivision

Sometimes, after a great many ideas have been collected under a particular heading, it becomes advisable to break it down still further. For example, newspaper tie-ups are common and offer many possibilities. The same goes for tie-ups with Auto Dealers, Department Stores, Transportation Companies and Radio Stations. Accordingly it will be wise to assign special folders to business organizations with which tie-ups are most common and to put tie-up ideas with less important ones in a folder marked "Miscellaneous."

Thus the breakdown under "Merchant Tie-ups" might be as follows:

a. Auto Dealers
b. Department Stores
c. Miscellaneous
d. Newspapers
e. Radio Stations
f. Transportation Companies.

(B.) Advertising

Under the second main head, "Advertising," the following subdivisions are suggested:

1. Direct Mail

SIMPLE FILE FOR MANAGERS

A properly kept file will prove invaluable to any man engaged in selling pictures to the public.

No one man can possibly know everything there is to be learned about exhibition nor can any one man remember everything he came across during his theatre career.

Keep a file and make it your personal property. In any situation it will prove your best friend. Don't leave it to assistants to run. Guard every folder in it. Take it with you no matter where your assignment.

In the following outline are the "makin's" for a simple but complete manager's file:

A. EXPLOITATION

FILE AWAY THOSE GOOD IDEAS!

2. Displays (Lobbies, Windows, Fronts, Marquees, etc.)
3. Heralds
4. Institutional Ads (Cool Copy, Theatre Service, etc., etc.)
5. Regulations on Ads
6. Newspaper Ads (Copy, layouts, etc.
7. Trailers.

Into the "Direct Mail" folder put good examples of letters, broadsides, postcards, programs and other material mailed to patrons.

In the "Displays" folder put photos of framed displays, fronts, marquees, window displays, lobby displays, etc., etc. Also put in here good examples of copy to accompany these displays.

It is obvious what to put in the folder headed "Heralds."

In the folder headed "Regulations on Ads" have information on local, state and federal statutes relating to copy and mailing of all kinds of advertising; restrictions on local bill-posting, banners, marquees and the like; and rules of local newspapers on mechanical requirements, deadlines and the like.

In the folder marked "Newspaper Ads," save ads from other towns, press books, trade papers, etc., which you think have particular merit as to copy or layout.

The folder for "Trailers" obviously should contain trailer copy and general information relating to trailers.

(C.) Product

Under this main head, keep press books, manuals and all special information relating to past, current and coming pictures. Producers' announcement books and tear sheets from fan magazines should also go in here.

In order to facilitate finding the material, it should be arranged alphabetically. If desired, it can be broken down further by type of picture, for example: Comedy, Drama, Mystery, Horror. The second suggestion, however, need not be used until the file has grown to big proportions.

(D.) Biographies, Stills, Mats

Having material of this kind on top is also very advantageous. An exhibitor may suddenly find himself with an overnight booking change that will leave him minus a press sheet and other material to help out on ads and publicity for the picture. Star-head mats are also invaluable in such an emergency if the regular mat material is not available.

Biographies, stills and star-head mats come in handy, too, when a chance suddenly arises to plant a local publicity story or in case the local newspaper receives a wire story on some star and asks the theatre for pictures and additional information.

Biographies and stills of executives are handy for new season picture openings, theatre anniversary special sections, occasions when theatre executives figure in the wire news, and the like.

(E.) Child Patronage

It is pretty obvious what to put in here: Ideas for running Kid Clubs, Tin Can Matinees, Airplane Modelling Classes, Serials, Boy Scouts tie-ups, and the like.

In the course of a year the Round Table section carries thousands of ideas for merchandising, advertising and exploitation of all forms. How to segregate this material so as to have it available for selection at all times has always been a problem.

In this article, Ira Glucksman tells you how to start and maintain a regular filing system designed along lines that should fit in with the operating methods of any and all showmen regardless of how large or how small their theatres are.

On the preceding page he has worked out the classifications and then breaks them down into various classifications so as to make the task both understandable and simple. By reading through the entire article you can work it out for yourself and get this valuable file started right away.

(F.) Stage Attractions

For convenience, this main heading requires some breakdown. Following are some of the suggested folders:

1. Amateur Nights
2. Fashion Shows
3. Miscellaneous (Minstrels, Stage Weddings, Country Store, Mother Hubbard Nights, Stage Auctions, etc., etc.)
4. Music (Bands, etc.)
5. Staging (Drops, sets, lights, scripts, etc., etc.)

This breakdown is meant, of course, for the theatre whose stage attractions are for the most part non-professional. Managers of deluxe houses with big stage presentations have specialists to do the staging.

(G.) Special Occasions

Throughout the year there are numerous special occasions which require special recognition, for example, Lincoln's Birthday, New Year's, Fourth of July, Labor Day, St. Patrick's Day. There are also special weeks such as Fire Prevention Week and Thrift Week, as well as events of local importance such as Graduation, Theatre Openings, Theatre Anniversaries, Cotton Festivals, Benefits, etc.

Fall, Lent, Summer, Pre-Christmas and Bad Weather periods call for special selling effort.

Ideas on building business around these periods should go into folders under "Special Occasions." The following compact breakdown is suggested:

1. Anniversaries (Theatre, Washington, Lincoln, etc.)
2. Benefits
3. Christmas
4. Fall (Football, School Re-opening, etc.)
5. Fourth of July
6. Lent
7. Miscellaneous (Mothers' Day, Straw Hat Day, Election, Graduation, etc., etc.)
8. Openings (Theatre and Picture)
9. Revivals (Picture)
10. Summer (Outdoor Opposition, Fairs, Circuses, Swimming Pools, etc.)
11. Weeks (Thrift, Fire Prevention, Safety, etc.)

(H.) Management

Operating a theatre requires more than straight selling, although selling, indeed, is the biggest factor in bringing the populace around to the box-office.

Important also are front house operation and general supervision of running the house. The following folder headings will be useful to file "Management" ideas:

1. Economies (Hints on Cost-cutting, elimination of waste, etc.)
2. Front House (Service Staff, etc.)
3. Routine (Policy and in the case of a chain house: Company Rules and Regulations).
4. Technical (Sound, Projection, Repairs, Painting, Maintenance, etc.)

The Headings Complete

Notice that all headings in breakdowns for this file are arranged in alphabetical order. This is done to facilitate finding them without delay or trouble.

Physical Make-Up of the File

Before starting your file, give some thought to its physical makeup such as type of folders, dividers, etc. These ought to be chosen for their convenience.

Legal size folders are best because they are roomy. Ends of tear sheets, heralds and other large pieces will stick out from small folders, get torn and make the file messy.

Main Headings such as "Exploitation," "Advertising," etc., should go on divider cards of the kind that have a framed segment sticking up for writing in the heading. These show at a glance the main divisions of the file.

When, because of wealth of material, it becomes necessary to subdivide a main heading twice, it is a good idea to get special dividers for this section. This will become clear if you look at the divisions under the main head, "Exploitation." The first divider card bearing that title would have its framed segment at the extreme left. A little farther to the right would come the segments of the next set of divider cards, as shown in the positions in the box. In the special case of the subdivision under "Merchant Tie-ups" there might be even a third set of divider cards with framed segments even farther to the right.

STORING MATERIAL!

Source of Material

Material to file will come from many sources. Some will be obtained from the Round Table section of "Motion Picture Herald." Part will come from producers. Some will be tear sheets or descriptions of stunts the manager devised himself or used successfully by the opposition.

Of course, not everything coming along ought to go into the file. Judgment has to be exercised here. But any idea that looks useful ought to be saved and put in its proper place so that it can be yanked out, maybe years later, at a moment's notice.

As the file grows and material collects in big batches, it will prove advisable to break it down farther than suggested here. (The file kept by the author in the Publix Home Office contained about 450 headings.) For that reason, it is a good idea to keep a typewritten list of all headings and folders in the file in the exact order they appear. This shows at a glance where anything is located. To permit easy inclusion of additional folders, triple space the list.

Where to File

It is sometimes troublesome to know exactly where to file some stunts or ideas. Sometimes they may logically be put into two or three or even more folders.

Take, for instance, a Roller Skate Matinee sponsored by a department store. This could be put under "Child Patronage" or in the "Department Stores" folder under "Merchant Tie-ups."

Some showmen who keep files will get around the problem by filing the stunt under both headings. That method, however, is unnecessary. It means extra work, a bulkier file and the nuisance of getting duplicates or triplicates of everything.

In all such instances, the thing to do is to file the idea where it will be of greatest value. In the example cited, the "Child Patronage" heading would be the best one under which to put the stunt because a description of the idea is more important than the mere fact that the department store sponsored it. Other types of merchants might be induced to sponsor a similar matinee. Still, objection might be made that when this method is used the manager looking for tie-up ideas in his "Department Stores" folder will overlook the stunt. Not at all, if he uses his file properly.

Using the File

To get the best use out of his file, the manager should know how to operate it. The secret of this is realizing that it is not always possible to find complete information in a single folder.

Take the case of an exhibitor looking for slants on a special kid matinee during Easter Week. Because Easter is the end of Lent, the first thing he will do, of course, is look in his Lent folder. But that ought not to be the end of his search. Next he ought to go to his "Child Patronage" division. Even then the possibilities are not exhausted. He still can look in some of the folders under "Exploitation," as well as the one labelled "Contests."

There might even be adaptable ideas in various folders under "Special Occasions" such as "Christmas," "Fourth of July" and "Benefits." Furthermore, additional hints can turn up in folders under "Stage Attractions."

A lot of trouble for a busy manager, some might say. Not if you think about it. Which is easier: Wracking your brains or memory for a selling slant or spending a few minutes looking through a few folders chock full of ideas that worked for other showmen?

Not that it is necessary, either, to follow out the exact ideas given in the file. The old ideas will suggest new ones. Almost any stunt successfully put across in the past can be given a new twist to fit a particular situation. It is this flexibility of ideas that makes them particularly valuable to keep on tap.

Of course, this is a free country and you can keep a file or not as you see fit. But the author knows, so far as he is concerned, he'll keep a file in any job he holds in this business or another one. One head, one memory, one imagination is all right. A lot of heads, a lot of memories and a lot of imaginations are far better.

CHAIR STUNT USED BY HERB JENNINGS ATTRACTED OTHERS

Good use was made of a director's chair claimed to have been used by Ronald Colman during the filming of "Cynara" when that picture was sold by Herb Jennings, manager of Loew's Grand Theatre, Atlanta, Ga.

In conjunction with an offer made by Loew Theatres throughout the country to award $100 to the man and the same amount to the woman who submitted the best answer to the question, "Should the wife in 'Cynara' forgive her husband?" Jennings also offered the chair and tied-up with a local merchant to use same in a window display. One of the city's leading newspapers came through with a corking publicity yarn on the stunt.

According to later reports, the chair gag went over so well that U. A. had to order a lot more to send around to other exhibitors in various parts of the country. For your further information, the chair was of the folding camp or deck type with a detachable back rest. Colman's name was painted on the canvas back-rest.

We're glad to get a line on what Herb Jennings is doing down in Atlanta.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Carl Laemmle came to Chicago last week for a sales conference and arrived here to a day just twenty-seven years after he first entered the picture business in this city. Some fifty branch managers and salesmen from 12 Middlewest exchanges helped him celebrate the occasion in a midseason pep meeting.

Steve Bennis, the well-known and fiery exhibitor who operates the Grant and Lincoln theatre at Lincoln, Ill., was in town last week, at which time it was learned that Bennis has acquired new duties. He has been elected president of the Lincoln chamber of commerce.

The case of Fred Oser and six other operators expelled from the operators' union against Tom Maloy and local officials has shifted from the court of Denis E. Sullivan, superior court judge, to that of Judge John P. McGoorty. A hearing last week was marked by lively debate between opposing counsel. Judge McGoorty is expected to give an early decision.

Clyde Eckhardt, Fox district manager, brings back glowing reports on business on "State Fair" at St. Louis and other spots. In a realignment of midwest branches the Detroit branch has been included in Eckhardt's territory and the St. Louis branch eliminated.

Plaza theatre at Gary, Indiana, which was razed by fire, has been rebuilt and will reopen shortly.

A new theatre supply house, handling a line of theatre equipment and accessories as well as sound heads, has been opened at 208 N. Wells street under the name Midwest Theatre Equipment Company.

Things have been happening over at United Artists exchange. As announced last week, Percy Barr is a new member of the sales staff. Since then Manager Eddie Grossman has added Sam Rifkin to cover down-state, Lou Goldstein to handle Indiana and Illinois, and Eddie Safier covering northern Illinois. Frank Young is still on the job hitting the ball in his usually effective manner in the city territory.

If there are any basket ball teams along the Row here's a tough team to pick on. It's the Davis theatre quintet, managed by H. J. Miller, chief of staff. This aggregation has won ten games in a row.

Distributing arrangements have been completed by George Dillon of Filmchoice, with Security Pictures Corporation, for distribution of "Maedchen in Uniform" in Chicago, Indianapolis and Milwaukee territories. Security is headed by Harry Lorch and Irving Mandel. Clinton S. Cook has been named central division representative of Filmchoice.

Charles Lowenberg, who is well known along the Row, where he formerly directed publicity and advertising for Universal, was greeting old friends on one of his infrequent visits from Milwaukee last week. Charlie is now director of advertising for the Fox Midwesco circuit.

RCA Stock Distribution Under Way in Wilmington

Radio Corporation of America common stock in the amount of $25,000,000 is being handled through the post office at Wilmington, Del., in the last stages of mailing the stock to 234,000 General Electric and Westinghouse stockholders. The stock represents part of the holdings of General Electric Company and Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, distribution resulting from the consent decree signed last November in the government anti-trust suit against the electrics.

To date mailing has required the expenditure of more than $300,000 in Wilmington by the Corporation Trust Company and the employment of nearly 150 clerks. The total expenditure also includes $50,000 for postage and $241,631.28 for revenue tax stamps.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 110, No. 11 March 11, 1933

WE'LL BE SEEING YOU

AS this issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD trips merrily to press the United States, including the villages of Broadway and Hollywood, are complaining, in not too complete secrecy, of a headache and underlying symptoms of coated tongue, inactive liver and decomposition of the outlook, complicated by various fevers and rashes.

Pontificating in that manner which is the special prerogative and privilege of editors, under the game laws, may we not at this time, in confirmation of our editorial infallibility, refer to an expression on this page some months ago in which we positively announced that the end of the world has not yet arrived.

Coal will still burn under the boilers. The carbons will still strike an arc. The movies will still move.

The bookkeepers have indeed kicked up quite a mess.

The money machine is in trouble. It made it and it can jolly well get out of it, itself.

We do, however, specifically guarantee the human race and the motion picture market. We know perfectly well that the people, the masses, will have amusement and we know equally well that the motion picture has done and can do the best job of it for the least money. The least money means per unit of population, which, of course, means the most money in total.

Most of the headache is over yesterday's dollar. The motion picture industry's future is in tomorrow's dollar—maybe tomorrow's dime. It was built on day-before-yesterday's dime anyway.

The motion picture's job is continuous. Its work will be done by those who know how and can do it.

This is likely to prove a sad and bitter period for those who devote their energies to having the jitters over the loss of sinecures built on something other than performance and goods delivered.

Life just has to be lived dangerously because it is a dangerous world. Business tries ever to boast of daring and the while nestle in safety, behind all manner of bulwarks. It can not be done for long at a time.

The world and the race and the business of living go on. And the only really serious thing that could happen to the motion picture industry would be the loss of the customers. Until they are lost there is no proper reason for despair. The birth rate is more important than the bank clearings.

We live in the now and the tomorrow. The headaches are efforts to do something about the irrevocable yesterday. The motion picture is worth just what it can get, now and tomorrow.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD will be out again next week.

THE BRITISH ARE COMING!

REAL significances are beginning to appear among the manifestations from Great Britain. British pictures are fairly on their way to mean vastly more in the American market than many care to admit. This is one of the somewhat belated but inevitable consequences of the coming of talk and sound.

Dialogue, it appears, has worked in a twofold manner. It has leveled down some of the disparities of technique between California and London, and it has encouraged the British to a new order of endeavor.

This comes to mind as one reads that British & Dominions Film Corporation announces a net profit for 1931-32 of £30,740, nearly double that of the year before. And next year they get American distribution through United Artists.

Meanwhile, in the face of a long standing notion that nothing very exciting ever had or ever could come out of British studios, along came "Rome Express," ranking high in technique, and now Universal is previewing another British-Gaumont production, shortly to be offered, "Be Mine Tonight," winning the acclaim of trade and lay press critics in both the Hollywood and New York sectors of observation. Casting about for counterweights for their enthusiasms, these critics seem able to find only that the products are "foreign."

German and British pictures are growing factors in American exhibition. They are most certain to continue to be. The motion picture is an American invention as a machine system. As an art it is a world art.

MR. SINCLAIR WRITES

MR. UPTON SINCLAIR'S opus entitled "Upton Sinclair presents William Fox" is a best seller and a best renter in the regions where the motion picture industry is of special interest. May we not for a lightsome moment point with pride to the fact that the book was discovered for the industry by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and that our review of it has since been the subject of some discussion, and considerable communication. For instance, Mr. Sinclair, in a letter the other day, was generous enough to remark:

> Your write-up of the Fox book is extremely clever and very subtly calculated to cause people to want to read the book. This of course I appreciate both as author and publisher.

This is interesting in view of the fact that some of the industry's marginal pussyfooters and bleaters have charged us with unkindness to Mr. Sinclair and Mr. Fox in our comments. Mr. Sinclair for one knows an honest opinion even if it is not said with flowers.

INDUSTRY MEETS DOLLAR CRISIS WITH 25 AND 50% SALARY CUTS

Idea Crystallized in Hays Apartment; Authorship Anonymous; Affects Worldwide Staffs of Companies for Eight Weeks

Savings Estimated from $800,000 to $5,000,000; Action Called Necessary in Bank Holiday on $1,400,000 Weekly Payroll

Salary reductions totaling 25 and 50 per cent were agreed to this week for a period of eight weeks by practically all of the large producing and distributing corporations which are members of the Hays organization. An official spokesman for the group said that this action was taken as an emergency alternative to a complete shutdown of studios, which was threatening due to the inability of producers to meet a $1,400,000 weekly studio payroll because of the banking stricture.

Upwards of 30,000 employees in home offices, exchanges, studios and in certain theatre divisions are affected by the order which reduces by 50 per cent all salary checks above $50, and by 25 per cent those salaries ranging downward from $50. Minimum salaries will be $37.50 and $15, respectively.

News of the drastic emergency order climaxed one of the most dramatic moments in recent motion picture history.

Committee Recommended Action

The idea was crystallized late Sunday evening in the private apartment of Will H. Hays, in the tower of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel on Park Avenue. Calls were dispatched over the week end to leaders of the various corporations, to attend an extraordinary session to discuss the financial situation on Sunday in Mr. Hays' apartment. Responding were Adolph Zukor, co-receiver of Paramount; Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's, Inc., and MGM; Samuel Goldwyn, in charge of production in Hollywood for United Artists; Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film; Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers Pictures; Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, and Jack Cohn, vice-president in charge of Columbia home office operations.

The group appointed a committee consisting of Messrs. Kent, Schenck and Goldwyn to study the advisability of adopting a 25-50 per cent salary reduction. They reported favorably within a few hours, suggesting and recommending such action.

Authorship of the plan is anonymous. No one would officially admit parentage of the idea.

Reduction Effective at Once

The reduction becomes effective immediately. Salaries will be paid in full up to and including the week ending Saturday, March 4th.

"All payments in the future will be paid when, as and if suitable mediums become available," according to the official announcement to Fox employees which was typical of the others. "It is impossible for the corporation at present to pay all of its payrolls in cash," the order said.

Executives of the corporations refused to discuss the exact relation of the order to the current bank situation. They did admit, however, that tightness of cash and the inability to transport currency to Hollywood were directly responsible for the 25-50 per cent salary reduction.

Employee-representatives of the large studios called a mass meeting in Hollywood Wednesday afternoon to act upon the New York plan to cut salaries 25 and 50 per cent. MGM, Columbia, Radio and Columbia workers, including contract players, immediately agreed, but Warner players asked for time to talk with counsel. Directors and writers on the Warner lot, however, agreed to accept the cut.

Four Weeks Without Pay at Fox Studio

The plan does not affect the Fox studio at Movietone City because employees on that lot offered a counter proposal, which was accepted, to work for four weeks without pay in lieu of eight weeks at reduced salary.

Paramount studios in Hollywood did not pay off employees on Wednesday, payday.

Metro's Culver City plant paid in cash up to $100. Balances were given in checks.

RKO's next payday in Hollywood is not due until next Wednesday. The studio has been on a two-week basis since the last ten per cent reduction.

Hal Roach studios paid salaries Wednesday by check. Cash was not available, it was said.

Mack Sennett's organization plans to pay off Thursday by check.

Columbia workers received 10 per cent of their salaries in cash, and the remainder in check. Columbia's home office workers were almost left without cash on payday, Saturday morning. Jack Cohn and others of the executive staff jumped into the breach and raised sufficient private capital to pay half in cash and the rest in check. "Groceries are important," said Mr. Cohn.

No one at Fox's Movietone studio was paid Tuesday, payday.

Estimates of Savings Vary

Warner's studio did not pay salaries Wednesday. The company said it hopes to pay Saturday, pending word from New York. Officials said they will have 100 per cent agreement of the entire studio personnel, or else the studio will close down.

Associated Press late Wednesday night estimated that the industry would effect an immediate saving of $5,000,000 for the eight weeks by the nationwide order. Official Hollywood estimates figured the saving at $800,000 for the entire period.

Hollywood's unfathomable salary demands were said by an official of Fox to be the reason for the reduction order. Although admittedly short of cash to pay studio salaries, it was said that the coast people had insisted that New York home offices, exchanges and the like share equal parts of the burden in order to carry on production.

Home office employees in New York already had been cut up to 45 per cent, with many Hollywood studios yet to suffer half that reduction.

There were rumblings that union workers of studios and theatres affected would not take the cut. Strikes were talked about. "If the unions want to strike," said the president of one corporation, "let 'em strike. We'll close our theatres." Meanwhile, Messrs. Elliot, Casey and Weber, representing the unions, were to meet Wednesday.

While the contracts of players earning enormous sums cannot be invaded normally, it was pointed out by an executive of importance that there are clauses in each agreement which cover such emergency situations.

Companies directly involved in the agreement include Columbia, Fox, Loew's and Metro, Paramount, RKO, United Artists, Sam Goldwyn, Inc. and Warner-First National. Universal would not admit participation, but officials of that corporation did say that drastic cuts in the salaries of personnel were about to be ordered.

Affects Worldwide Staffs

The 25 to 50 per cent reduction affects each organization's worldwide staff, except in the cases of those corporations which have bankrupt theatre subsidiaries. In those cases, control of theatre salaries rests with the court, which previously made drastic reductions.

West Coast representatives of the New York corporations which agreed to the reduction include, among others, Louis B. Mayer, Winfield Sheehan, Jack L. Warner, Harry Cohn, B. B. Kahane and Hal Roach.

The Hays organization, known officially as the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, was the first to make the new low wage scale effective.

Although only large producer-distributor companies definitely agreed to the new wage pact, membership of the Hays organization also includes Eastman Kodak, Electrical Research and RCA Photophone. An executive of Erpi said there was but slight chance of the agreement reaching the equipment field

Lower Foreign Sales Cited

Coincidentally with orders for the drastic salary reduction came word from the Motion Picture Division of the Department of Commerce at Washington that most rigid economies in production costs have been adopted by the motion picture industry in order to compete with present conditions, and expenses in most studios have been shaved 35 or 40 per cent.

Reductions in receipts from pictures shown abroad, the department said, have added to the general curtailment in revenue which the industry has suffered. Whereas in 1929 thirty to 35 per cent of the entire income of the industry came from abroad, today the sales of pictures to foreign distributors account for only 20 to 25 per cent of the receipts.

"The greater competition from foreign film producers, difficulties due to tariff regulations and disorganized exchange and the increased expense of producing talking pictures in foreign languages," it was said, "have all combined to effect this decrease in foreign sales of American films.

"The reduction in the cost of production in the motion picture industry is shown by the census figures for 1931, compared with those for 1929. Cost of production in 1931 amounted to $151,765,513, against $184,102,419 in 1929, a reduction of 17.6 per cent in 1931."

The plan met some opposition by Hays membership late Wednesday. As a result, a special meeting was called and for a time it seemed that a mediator would be required to iron out the situation. The opposition was overruled, but nevertheless, went on record with the remark.

With the promulgation of the national bank holiday of four days, following closely upon state moratoria which swept through every commonwealth in the country, the distribution machinery of the industry was forced to revise its previously instituted policy. With the declaration of state holidays, the distributors, for the most part, insisted that film deliveries would be made only when cash or postal money order accompanied the order, or on a C. O. D. basis. Since the national holiday was ordered, however, that method has been revised to permit the extension of credit to exhibitors who were in the slightest degree responsible.

Distributors Aiding Exhibitors

Distribution home offices have provided their exchanges with full authority to make credit ratings on individual exhibitor accounts. Local conditions, the exhibitor's condition and the exchange manager's judgment as to his credit potentialities, in each case govern the extent of the credit extended. Those whose integrity in meeting obligations in the past is unquestioned are experiencing no difficulty in obtaining product, while those whose ratings are less irreproachable are receiving in many cases a limited amount of product on a deferred payment arrangement. In these cases exchanges will cease shipment if payment is not made by a specified time, but thus far there are no cases on record of theatres having to close for lack of product. Preliminary warnings generally bring forth the contracted payments, it is understood. Exchange executives have in effect become territorial credit managers.

System Functioning Smoothly

Distribution executives have reported the credit and collection system invoked in the emergency to be operating smoothly, with no apparent immediate necessity for revision.

Warner-First National, among major distributors, ordered its sales forces in the field to cease selling activity temporarily, pending the issuance of scrip, when revision of that order is expected in accordance with the scrip or other exchange medium arrangement in individual localities.

Independent distributors are extending credit to exhibitors where such a policy is feasible. Several independent organizations are curtailing releases. Majestic has withheld three features, scheduled for release this month, until after April 1. The features were "The Public Be Damned," "Sing, Sinner, Sing" and "Curtain at Eight."

One distribution executive was quoted late last week as indicating that the distribution situation would only be seriously affected in the event of a drastic and continuous drop in theatre receipts.

Public Agencies Help

All indications, recorded from diversified sections of the nation, clearly point at this time to a reasonable response on the part of the public to the motion picture attractions offered by the exhibitor.

Materially aiding the exhibition phase of the industry are the newspapers and various public agencies, which, clearly believing that the type of entertainment which the motion picture theatre can provide is definitely essential at this time for the psychological effect on the citizenry, have taken steps to urge the public to attend the film theatre. Notable among such actions is that of the Detroit Free Press, which voluntarily published full-page advertisements without charge, suggesting theatre attendance as a means of mental relief during the crisis. Publications and agencies in other situations have acted along similar lines.

Circuits Holding Up

Reports from important executives of major national circuits indicated that the business of these organizations had been fair in the face of the weekend national holiday.

In New York, where legitimate theatres have arranged to accept checks and scrip at the box office, business has maintained an unexpectedly high level. Last week nine Broadway houses grossed $166,698.

Sidney Samuelson has called a special meeting of Allied of New Jersey members for next Tuesday, when a decision will be made whether to close about 100 northern New Jersey houses indefinitely.

Various attempts to get distributors to grant reduction in film rentals are said to have failed. Exhibitors claim that during the past week business in some houses fell off 75 per cent.

Checks for Scrip Books

In Philadelphia attendance fell off, but in general the situation was viewed rather more brightly than on the declaration of the state's holiday last week. Independent exhibitors in the city were preparing early in the week to accept checks for admissions. In Memphis the theatres of M. A. Lightman, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, were accepting checks for $2.50 scrip admission books and are holding the checks until the banks reopen. In Boston a drop of approximately 20 per cent was indicated over the last weekend. In Denver little effect on theatre attendance was noted as a result of the bank holiday.

With the formation of two barter exchanges in Milwaukee, one formed by a committee appointed by Mayor Hoan, several neighborhood theatres are accepting scrip at specified performances, with other houses expected to follow the example.

In Detroit, while several of the larger theatres were affected, the greater number of smaller, outlying houses experienced no marked decrease in attendance. Cleveland, Milwaukee, Washington, Harrisburg, Pa., San Francisco reported attendance holding to normal, with several instances in these situations of record or near-record figures.

In the nature of an innovation, at least for this particular emergency, is the policy of some 17 theatres in the Iowa territory whose center is Des Moines, which have been reported accepting produce.

Checks, scrip and I. O. U.'s are a common admission policy throughout the south and southwest.

Chase Officials Leave Fox Board

Chase National Bank representatives on the directorate of Fox Film resigned this week in favor of executives of the corporation, thereby completing the return of actual operation of the Fox companies from the banking group to the management headed by Sidney R. Kent.

The new board members are Sidney Towell, comptroller of the company; William Eadie, assistant comptroller; Felix Jenkins, of the legal department of Fox Film; Richard A. Rowland, member of the executive committee, production advisor and contact man between the studio and New York, and Daniel O. Hastings, receiver for General Theatres Equipment Company.

Directors who retired are Winthrop Aldrich, chairman of the governing board of Chase National; Cornelius Vanderbilt, Matthew C. Brush and C. E. Richardson, who will also retire as a vice president and treasurer. William Gossett, attorney, of Hughes, Schurman and Dwight, New York, was elected secretary of the Fox company.

Mr. Richardson, whose appointment was made last year as overseer of Fox financial matters, is understood to have asked to be relieved of his post. He plans to retire soon, it was said, to make his home in Philadelphia. His successor has not been named.

When Sidney Kent joined the corporation as president one year ago, the banking interests decided to turn over eventually actual operation completely to the management. This week's action will automatically place additional operations in the hands of the Fox executives on the management board.

LEGISLATIVE BATTLE IN LAST ROUND; INDUSTRY WINS CENSORSHIP FIGHTS

Exhibitors Defeat Varying Tax Measures in Alabama, Connecticut and Georgia; Censors Lose in Three States

Bills Inimical to Motion Picture Business Still Before Lawmakers of 13 States; Developments Outlined State by State

The half-way mark in the motion picture industry's record-breaking battle against unfair, adverse state legislation has gone by and with it dozens of proposed measures for theatre taxation, censorship, Sunday closing, and other forms of legislative irritation. Developments since the legislative situation was reported in detail in the HERALD issue of February 18th, were the victorious campaigns waged by theatre owners against variously proposed taxation in Alabama, Connecticut, Georgia and elsewhere. Censorship measures were killed principally in Connecticut, Indiana and Nebraska.

The fight is not over, however. There still is much to be done by exhibitors and others.

California still has several anti-industry bills before it, and so have the state legislatures in Connecticut, Delaware, Iowa, Kansas, Maryland, Missouri, Nebraska, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Utah, West Virginia, and elsewhere. Wyoming was the first to end its session, from which the industry emerged unscathed.

New Legislative Developments

The industry was victorious in Alabama where a sales tax measure would have levied 10 per cent on all amusements. Representative Harrison authored the bill, which was tabled by the ways and means committee.

No support was given to either the state censor proposition or a tax bill introduced in Connecticut. The judiciary committee of the General Assembly reported unfavorably on a Sunday closing measure. Two other bills are to be heard, one providing for two men in each projection room and another demanding fire shutters on projectors, which measure is reputed to have the support of the state fire authorities. The "blue" law would have prevented opening on Sunday until 7 p. m., instead of at 2 o'clock.

Representative Poore introduced in the Delaware legislature a bill to impose an annual tax of 5 per cent on the gross income of every public and semi-public entertainment. Senator Van Sant already had introduced two similar measures.

Georgia theatre men fought hard and won a battle against 10 per cent taxation on admissions. The House ways and means committee tabled the proposition.

Making Headway in Kansas

Sunday shows are now permissible at Evanston, Illinois, where, after eight years, the public ordered the ban repealed and censured the aldermanic board for overriding the mayor's veto of a Sunday ordinance.

The judiciary committee killed a state censorship bill in Indiana.

The Iowa House of Representatives had not yet acted on Representative Ellsworth's measure which would prohibit unlawful use, manufacture, possession or preparation of stench bombs, tear bombs or other liquid or gaseous obnoxious matter. Last week, a measure was introduced, aimed at non-theatrical showings, which would tax schools and other non-commercial institutions showing motion pictures.

The house judiciary committee of the Kansas legislature reported favorably on a bill which would allow Sunday showings.

In Kansas, the state affairs committee of the house has brought in a bill to reduce the number of inspectors employed by the state censor board, and to give the governor the right to name inspectors, who are now appointed by the censors, and to permit exhibitors to use slides to show the board's approval, instead of film tags as now required. A bill for a 2 per cent gross sales tax is before a special senate committee. An income tax bill has been approved by joint committees.

Maine killed in committee a state censorship proposal.

The Maryland legislative body has before it a group of film bills. The newest, introduced in the House of Delegates, would compel licensing, at $10 annually, of all projectionists, whether professional or amateur. Non-professionals would be forced to serve at least six months with professionals before they would become eligible for examination and licensing. The Better Business Bureau brands this bill as class legislation and is opposed to it. David McIntosh introduced a resolution in the senate asking for stricter state censorship, claiming the present measure is ineffectual. This action followed the senate finance committee's censuring of the board. Exhibitors still are watching the situation as regards proposed tax legislation, although Governor Ritchie is supposed to be in opposition to theatre taxes. Another tax bill would double license fees from the present scale, which is $300 annually.

A movement is afoot in Massachusetts to conduct a sweeping investigation of the state censorship situation. Representative Langone, Boston, filed a bill which would prohibit the licensing board of Boston to order a theatre closed without first obtaining approval from the city council. This action follows the agitation resulting from the closing last month of the Howard theatre.

A bill imposing a tax of one-fifth of a cent on each foot of film shown at all theatres has been thrown into the Missouri legislative hopper. The tax would affect all types of film and would be paid by the exhibitor. Exhibitors say they feel flattered that another bill prohibiting standing room has been introduced in the legislature. Exhibitors are fighting the luxury sales tax, which provides for a levy of 5 per cent on theatre admissions, among other items. Representative Keating, of Kansas City, Democratic floor leader, authored the bill.

Nebraska Kills Bills

Representative Adams' measure providing for state censorship still is pending, although another, which would prohibit the showing of women smoking, was tied in judiciary committee vote, which means it will have to be reintroduced if it is to be given further consideration. Recently, a third bill was introduced, requiring the employment of two operators in all booths.

No action has yet been taken in the New Hampshire legislature on a state censorship proposition.

Exhibitors in New York are alarmed at the progress being made by sponsors of a 10 per cent admission tax measure. The bill already has passed its second reading. Late last week, another anti-censorship bill was introduced, seeking repeal of the state censor law. Assemblyman Moffat's measure also would transfer the taxation of films to the tax department, with increases. He would charge license fees, instead of those now paid to censors, of $3 per 1,000 feet of negative and $2 per 1,000 feet of positive, with news, scientific and educational films exempted. Imposition of a 5 per cent tax on incomes from radio broadcasting enterprises was proposed by Senator Buckley. The New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children has filed protests with the legislature against passage of measures which would open theatres to unaccompanied children between 10 a. m. and 6 p. m.

Ohio film interests are continuing their fight against a proposed 10 per cent admission levy. The bill is scheduled to go to the floor shortly. Also, theatre interests are prepared to fight a two-men-in-the-booth proposition. Akron is considering taxation of vending machines in theatres. Amount of the license fee has not been determined.

There is little likelihood of either of Pennsylvania's state legislative bodies repealing the "blue" laws. Exhibitors are organizing a campaign against a bill which would require employment of two men in every projection room.

Amendments would be included in Utah's new sales tax measure.

The state legislature of Vermont killed a "blue" law repealer.

Representative Holt introduced a state censorship measure in West Virginia.

Possibilities of repealing Wisconsin's 84-year old "blue" laws, demanded last November in a statewide referendum, are considered remote.

Delaware Bill May Affect 100 Companies

More than one hundred motion picture corporations chartered in Delaware, and a number of radio and television companies, whose charters have become inoperative and void for non-payment of taxes or expired limitations, may be affected by one of the most important corporation bills of the present session of the Delaware legislature, a measure to make it easier to renew or revive charters which have been declared void. The bill was introduced late last week by Senator Griffenberg, at Dover, Del.

Under the provisions, a corporation seeking to revive its charter would be required to pay a sum equal to all franchise taxes and penalties due at the time its charter became inoperative. This sum shall not be greater than the amount of tax which would be payable on filing an original certificate of incorporation for a corporation having the same amount of authorized capital stock as the corporation seeking to renew or revive its charter had at the time its charter became inoperative. The certificate of renewal or revival and the proof of the payment to the state tax department would have to be presented to the secretary of state.

During the past two years, due to the economic conditions, principally, there has been an abnormal voiding of charters. It is intended that, through this bill, it shall be easier for corporations to renew their charters in Delaware when better conditions return, rather than having this done in other states.

The following motion picture, equipment, sound, radio and television corporations, which were chartered in Delaware, and whose char-

BROADCASTING COMPANIES FACING U. S. QUIZ ON RADIO DOMINATION

Last Congress Also Was Asked to Determine Whether Earnings Are Diverted to Meet RCA's Management Losses

by FRANCIS L. BURT

Washington Correspondent

An exhaustive investigation by a special Congressional committee, to determine whether National Broadcasting Company and Columbia Broadcasting System are operating to the detriment of the radio rights of the general public, may be pushed during the new special session if opportunity arises. The inquiry was sought by Congressman Louis T. McFadden (Rep.) of Pennsylvania in the closing days of the last Congress.

Representative McFadden is perhaps best known to the country as a bitter enemy of Herbert Hoover and author of two attempts to obtain his impeachment when he was president.

The special committee sought by Mr. McFadden in a resolution introduced in the House would be instructed to determine whether the management and conduct of the two broadcasting systems is properly in the public interest or whether, "as indicated by the disproportionate share of the total income from broadcasting privilege, these major organizations do tend to dominate the radio broadcasting field."

Would Study Use of Earnings

The investigation also would develop whether the earnings of National Broadcasting Company from "the sale of radio privilege or its related accessories, under license issued by the Federal Radio Commissioner" are properly applied for the public benefit or diverted to meet management losses of Radio Corporation or its subsidiary organizations in other fields.

"The two major broadcasting systems are known to own or operate directly less than 5 per cent of the total of more than 600 radio stations licensed by the Federal Radio Commission, and supply radio-program material through telephone-wire connections to less than 25 per cent of the total number of radio stations," Mr. McFadden declared in introducing his resolution, "but are known to have derived a gross income from the sale of radio privilege in the sum of $39,106,776 for the year 1932, and increasing sums in previous years, to wit: $35,791,999 for the year 1931, $26,615,746 for the year 1930, $18,729,571 for the year 1929, and $10,252,497 for the year 1928.

Cites Loss to Publications

"The two systems are known to operate separate 'artists' bureaus,' which are privately owned and managed departments for the placing of artist talent in radio, and these departments show further an additional income from commissions and fees, variously estimated in excess of $10,000,000 for the year 1932 and for proportionate sums in the several preceding years.

"These total sums are derived from sources which are properly in the public domain and are operated under gratuitous license and privilege from the Federal Radio Commission, and in opposition to and with resulting financial loss aggregating many millions of dollars to newspapers, magazines and periodicals, and the two broadcasting systems appear to derive a disproportionate share of the total earnings from radio broadcasting in comparison with their ownership of or service to the total number of radio stations licensed.

"The National Broadcasting Company shows income for the year 1932 from the sale of radio privilege in the sum of $26,504,891 and proportionately lesser sums in the several years preceding, and during the entire period of this enormous growth and constantly increasing income the National Broadcasting Company has continuously claimed 'no profit' from these operations."

"The National Broadcasting Company," McFadden said, "is a wholely owned subsidiary of the Radio Corporation of America, and various other subsidiary operations of the Radio Corporation of America in private business are known to have suffered serious financial losses and to be in a state of receivership, and it is known that certain members of the board of directors of the Columbia Broadcasting System are or have been also members of the board of directors of the Radio Corporation of America, National Broadcasting Company, or one of its related companies."

'Cavalcade' True to Britain, Says Press

Gratitude and regret are intermingled in the expressed reaction of the British press to Fox's "Cavalcade"—gratitude to Hollywood for finished production and regret that it could not have been made by the industry at home.

A "monument" to Winfield Sheehan, production executive, was the verdict of the Film Renter of London, and its editor, Ernest W. Fredman, put it this way: "You don't need to tell me that the genius behind this film was Winfield Sheehan, who pinned his faith to the picture and insisted upon it being British throughout, with the result that he has truly reaped a great triumph."

Campbell Dixon in the Daily Telegraph of London referred to the production as a "pageant of modern England." Edward Hodgson in the Daily Express commended the fact that "there is not the slightest hint of an American accent." Seton Margrave in the Daily Mail said something of the like when he called it a "picture which speaks with understanding." Cinema spoke of its "faithfulness of atmosphere, perfection of detail and sincerity of treatment."

BRITISH EXHIBITORS DROP "CO-OP" PROPOSAL; B & D PROFITS INCREASE

Company Almost Doubles Net with Policy of Producing Cheery Pictures That Help Public to Forget Its Troubles

A. Hitchcock, Who Directed First British Talker, Joins London Film; Companies Invading Hollywood for Talent

by BERNARD CHARMAN
London Correspondent

Following a commotion at a recent meeting of the Council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, when a subcommittee recommended that no action be taken toward formation of a cooperative booking scheme, the Council has now decided gracefully to accept the advice. At its previous meeting the Council had referred the suggestion back to the committee with a request that it obey orders and get down to the preparation of such a scheme.

What the committee proposed at the latest session is that members of the CEA be asked whether they were willing to join a separate society to be formed for the purpose.

Council Washes Hands

This proposal the Council has agreed to, which means in plain words that it now washes its hands of the cooperative plan.

The special committee tabulated the objects of the proposed separate cooperative society as follows:

(a) To cooperate for the economic booking and distribution of films.

(b) To negotiate and arrange for the supply to members of materials, goods and services of any kind upon special and advantageous terms.

(c) To safeguard and protect the common interests of the members of the Society.

It recommended exhibitor control and popular election of the executive committee.

A warning of the gravity of the present decision was given by Mr. S. K. Lewis, a young but vigorous member of the Council, who said the committee had felt that if another scheme were put out and turned down, cooperative trading such as they visualized would be killed and could not be resurrected.

In any event, there does not appear to have been much ruffling of the smooth serenity of the Kinematograph Renters Society, whose fiat that its members shall refuse to do business with any cooperative trading concern still holds. Doesn't matter what society the exhibitors form, that's still going to be a stiffish hurdle to jump. Wonder whether we shall hear much more about cooperative trading?

B. & D. Profits Increase

British & Dominions Film Corporation, producers of many British successes, announce a net profit on 1931-32 of £30,740. This compares with a profit of £17,000 during the preceding year, and shows a most satisfactory advance at a time when the tide of industry is universally considered to be running in the opposite direction.

When they signed up Tom Walls and Ralph Lynn, together with members of their stage team—all since gone over to Gaumont-British—B & D found a formula for getting at the box office in times of depression. With these players as a nucleus they built up a reputation for farce and easily digestible fare, which they have maintained right through.

Actual profit on trading during the twelve months was £67,113.

And next year's world distribution is assured by the company's tieup with United Artists.

Hitchcock Joins London Film

A bombshell has been dropped in British production circles by the defection of Alfred Hitchcock from British International Pictures in order to sign up on a long-term contract with London Film Productions, a new British unit still less than a year old.

Only last year Hitchcock was appointed supervisor of productions to BIP. Not only is he regarded as one of the select band of class British directors, but he directed the first English talker, "Blackmail," and is credited with introducing to the screen many players who since have won international fame.

With London Films, the presiding genius of which is Alexander Korda, former Hollywood director, "Hitch" will work as a director, and it is stated that he also will occupy an executive position.

London Films also announced the signing up of a number of internationally famous stars, including Clive Brook, Leslie Howard, Charles Laughton, Roland Young and Elizabeth Bergner, the famous German actress.

The same thought has obviously also occurred to the Gaumount-British organization, as their engagement of Esther Ralston and Conrad Veidt for recent productions proved.

Even British International has come into line with this policy, as Arthur Dent brought back the signatures of Constance Cummings and Olive Borden.

The C. E. A. Nominations

Two nominations have been made for the vice-presidency of the British Cinematograph Exhibitors Association for 1933-1934. One is John Harrison of Manchester, the other Sydney K. Lewis of Birmingham.

John Harrison is a bluff, straightforward member of the "old school." Sydney Lewis, on the other hand, is a mere lad—not yet 40. He is general manager of a small independent circuit and a volcano of energy.

The "Kine Year Book"

I have just received a copy of the 1933 edition of the "Kinematograph Year Book," the vade mecum of the British industry, now in its twentieth year of continuous publication. The contents of the current edition suggests that the Year Book is a more complete directory of the whole trade on this side than ever.

If one is allowed comparison, the "Kine Year Book" might be termed the "Motion Picture Almanac" of the British trade, for both serve an identical purpose in their respective spheres and cover their respective trades with a powerful magnifying glass.

The Year Book under notice is conveniently divided into sections covering such a diversity of subjects as: films trade-shown in the year, films registered, trade organizations, who's what in the trade, who's what in the studio, theatre circuits, an elaborated inventory of all theatres in the British Isles, and other directory material.

In addition, its reviews of the past year in Great Britain, U. S. A., Australia, Canada and India show a series of informative pictures. If the foreign reviews are of the high standard of the story of Great Britain, by S. G. Rayment (editor of the "Kinematograph Weekly"), they can be accepted as of the first order of authenticity.

The American who maintains an interest in the British industry will find that interest greatly stimulated through this volume. He will find a complete alphabetical list of all films trade shown in Britain up to the end of November, 1932, and he may be surprised to realize that more than 230 British productions were registered during the year.

Joe Brandt Named President Of Associated Publications

Joe Brandt, former president of Columbia, has joined Associated Publications as president, with headquarters at the company's New York offices. Ben Shlyen becomes vice president and continues as editor-in-chief and publisher.

Mr. Brandt's entry into the publishing field comes after 23 years in production and distribution. Many years ago, he was associated with Billboard, the Dramatic Mirror, The White Rats publication (now the N. V. A. Magazine) and Universal Weekly. Mr. Brandt had early training in the advertising business with Hampton Advertising. Following this he practiced law for two years. He joined Universal as publicity and advertising manager, later becoming general manager, and then formed his own producing company with Harry and Jack Cohn.

Warner 42nd Street Train In New York for Premiere

Coming from Hollywood the Warner "42nd Street Special" will arrive in New York Thursday. Stars on the train are Bette Davis, Joe E. Brown, Tom Mix, Glenda Farrell, Helen Vinson, Claire Dodd, Eleanor Holm, Preston Foster, Lyle Talbot, Laura La Plant and Leo Carillo, as well as chorus girls from the Warner film "42nd Street," which will open Thursday at the Strand.

With Tom Mix leading the cavalcade on his horse King, the "42nd Street Special" passengers will parade along 42nd street as part of the celebration of the 108th anniversary of the laying out of that thoroughfare. They will have their first birdseye view of the city from the top of the Chrysler Building; then there will be a lunch given at the Hotel Commodore in their honor by the 42nd Street Merchants and Property Owners' Association. The stars and chorus girls will make their headquarters in New York at the Hotel Ambassador.

Midwesco Circuit Files Bankruptcy Plea in Milwaukee

With a petition in bankruptcy filed last week in Milwaukee by Midwesco Theatres, Inc., the film industry saw the biggest bankruptcy action ever instituted in eastern Wisconsin. The Midwesco theatres, embracing 51 houses, were recently turned back by Fox to the Saxe interests for operation. Liabilities were listed in the petition at $1,535,167.34 and assets were given at $310,173.76. Unsecured claims totaled $1,436,280, and $3,052 in admission taxes is owed.

Actually, only about 14 of the 51 theatres are affected by the action, as the three companies recently organized by Thomas and John E. Saxe took back the houses they formerly controlled. The new companies are Saxe Management, Inc., Statewide Theatres Corp. and Wisconsin Amusement Enterprises Corp. Of the houses left to Midwesco, two are in Milwaukee, the Palace and Strand, both closed.

The first meeting of creditors of the circuit will be held in the Federal building at Milwaukee March 15. The theatre circuit has an interest in equipment and sound apparatus in more than 20 theatres throughout the state. Actual owners of the theatres will probably continue to operate them, it was reported, making arrangements with Julius J. Goetz for continued use of Midwesco equipment. Mr. Goetz was appointed receiver last week. Officials said the corporation and its subsidiaries had operated at loss of $900,000 in 1932.

The Saxe brothers are going ahead with plans for decentralization of the 51 former Midwesco houses. They are expected ultimately to retain only the houses they want. Saxe will continue to operate the Capitol and the Strand in Madison, the state capital. The Madison has reverted to Roy Cummings. Other houses reported to be turned back are the Plaza and Mirth in Milwaukee and the Park in Waukesha.

Among Midwesco assets are listed $98,500 due on open accounts, $77,332 cash in banks and $38,479 in machinery. The company had equipment in 14 theatres and it lists an unestimated interest in sound equipment in 21 houses. The receiver, Mr. Goetz, is reported to be studying the possibility of reopening the Palace and continuing the operation of the Strand in Milwaukee.

The bankruptcy petition was signed by H. J. Fitzgerald, vice-president, and Richard H. Brown, assistant secretary. The petition showed that among the assets there was no interest in the theatre properties other than $7,500 in real estate in Beloit, $38,479 for equipment and furnishings in 14 theatres and unknown interest in sound equipment in 21 theatres in Milwaukee and the state. One of the largest liability claims is for $141,861 by John H. and Lulu Herziger of Menasha on a land purchase contract.

On the heels of its voluntary bankruptcy action, Fox West Coast has launched a general move to return many theatres to their original owners. In Los Angeles, the first houses to go back this week were the Glendale and Adams, which revert to Lou Bard, the La Brea to Harry Chottner and the Balboa and Figueroa to Capitol Theatres, Inc.

Schedules of liability totaling nearly $25,000,000 are expected to be filed late this week in United States district court at Los Angeles. Wesco, the parent company, is believed to be the heaviest creditor with claims approximating $15,000,000. The case has been assigned to Samuel W. McNabb, referee in bankruptcy and former federal district attorney at Los Angeles. Included in the bankruptcy are 41 houses, 25 of them in Los Angeles territory, seven in Arizona, four in northern California and five in southern Oregon. Charles Skouras and John Treanor were appointed ancillary receivers for the Fox West Coast properties in northern California by the San Francisco courts.

Fox West Coast abandoned the publicity and advertising department at the home office this week. William T. Powers, formerly of Paramount, who has joined the Fox organization as legal adviser in the real estate department, is in Los Angeles at the present time. It is understood that he will concentrate upon the problem of effecting reductions in rents.

In Kansas City, reorganization of Fox Midwest administration departments got under way this week following the separation of the Midwest division from Los Angeles supervision. Operating control of the division has been turned over to Elmer C. Rhoden, with all departmental functions centered in Kansas City. The bankruptcy proceedings of the Fox West Coast Theatres will in no way affect the middle western unit, Mr. Rhoden declared this week.

Transfer of the auditing department from Los Angeles is now completed, with Charles Schaefer of New York as divisional chief auditor. Fox theatres in the St. Louis territory have been added to the group supervised by the Kansas City auditing department. Reorganization of the booking department has been brought about by the reduction in the number of districts from four to five. The same number of bookers are retained, but there has been a change in personnel. F. E. Ritter, formerly in charge of the statistical department, is handling bookings for the Topeka district. Martin Finkelstein is booking manager for the Kansas City and Springfield districts, now combined, and Edward Shanberg remains as booker for the Wichita sector. St. Louis bookings will continue to be handled in that city. Allan Karf, booker for outstate houses, has been transferred to Marshall, Mo., as city manager succeeding Frank J. Celoud. Other changes include: Willliam Wagner, Kansas City district manager, placed in charge of the Plaza, Kansas City, replacing L. M. Garman; H. E. Ulrich, Springfield district manager, now city manager at Salina, Kan.; T. S. Wilson, from Waldo, Kansas City, to Beyers, Excelsior Springs, Mo.; John W. Creamer, Salina, Kan., to Waldo, Kansas City; Phillip T. Hill, Bayers Excelsior Springs, to Fredonia, Kan., replacing Arthur LaSalle.

Fox Midwest is clear of either receivership or bankruptcy proceedings of Fox West Coast, because it is understood to be operating under a new holding company recently organized and is no longer a subsidiary of the Fox West Coast chain.

The Los Angeles receivership case has not affected theatres of the Intermountain division with headquarters in Denver. These theatres are affiliated with Fox West Coast.

Ancillary Receivers Named For RKO Thea. Operating Co.

In the RKO receivership actions, Samuel Kaufman, Newark, N. J., lawyer, and the Irving Trust Company of New York, were appointed ancillary receivers for RKO Theatre Operating Corp. The application was made by Jack Silberman, a New York bondholder, Franklin Investment Co. and Brattner and Pollock, owners of New Jersey theatres leased to RKO. The appointment was made by Federal Judge Guy L. Fake.

Appointment of Irving Trust was opposed by William Harris, counsel for Mr. Silberman, and by Andrew J. Steelman, chairman of the federal court procedure committee of the Essex County Bar Association. Mr. Harris declared a corporation was not an officer of the court and could not be appointed receiver, and that Irving Trust was not authorized to do business in New Jersey and could not act as receiver there. The court said that as the bank had been named primary receiver in New York, it would be named there.

An adjourned hearing of Orpheum circuit creditors was set for March 20 by Referee Oscar W. Ehrhorn.

Weiss Filming Negro Play At New York Atlas Studios

Weiss Brothers, independent producers, have secured the talking picture rights to the negro play, "Louisiana," now playing on Broadway, and written by J. Augustus Smith. The play was directed by Samuel J. Park, who will also direct the picture, in association with Arthur Heerl.

Production started Wednesday at the Atlas Sound Studios in New York, with the original colored cast. Mr. Weiss will supervise. Robert Mintz wrote the script.

B & K Receivership Petition Dismissed As Unwarranted

A petition asking equity receivership for Balaban & Katz Corp., which was filed in Chicago early last week by attorneys for Rose Philbrook, holder of a $1,000 bond, was dismissed Thursday by Federal Judge Wilkerson, who indicated that a plea from a single creditor against an admittedly solvent concern was insufficient to establish a request for receivership. Paramount-Publix Corp., now in receivership, owns 96 per cent of Balaban & Katz common stock. S. A. Karlin, Mrs. Philbrook's attorney, asked the court for permission to file an amended petition. The court withheld decision on the matter.

Meanwhile in New York, the Stock Exchange admitted to listing certificates of deposit issued by Chase National Bank for Paramount-Famous Lasky Corp. 20-year 5½s, due in 1950.

Creditors of Paramount Publix Saturday voted approval of continuance of the corporation's business. This action, which involved 50 or more creditors, was in accordance with a recommendation made by Adolph Zukor and Charles D. Hilles, co-receivers, in a report on the corporation's current position, which indicated, from unaudited balance sheets, that the corporation is in a liquid position.

Judge Samuel Seabury is counsel for a newly formed national committee of Paramount-Publix landlords. On the executive board are Bernard Rogers, New York; Gustave Frankel, Chicago; H. W. Holland, St. Petersburg, Fla.; A. B. Jones, New York, and Clarence P. Zieger, Hartford, Conn., with Reynold Goodman as executive secretary and offices at 70 Pine street, New York.

$150,349,815 Assets Reported

The receivers' report, 25 pages in length, included a tentative balance sheet, dated Dec. 31, 1932, which showed assets with a book value, after reserves, of $150,349,815, and liabilities, other than capital stock and surplus, of $47,826,890. Current assets included cash amounting to $711,381, accounts receivable, less reserve, of $754,536, and inventory of $1,409,653. Prior to the receivership cash had declined to $399,545. Total book assets of over $150,000,000 include $120,000,000 in advances to and investments in subsidiary and affiliated companies. Claims on the corporation's theatre subsidiaries represent most of this sum.

The receivers' report notes "relatively profitable" operations for production and distribution during 1930, a 14 per cent decline during 1931, without showing a loss for the year, and considerable improvement for the last half of 1932, following a further decline of 27 per cent in film rentals for the first half of the year. The decline was attributed to the poor quality of product released during that period. The report says that in spite of gross decreases attributable to prevailing economic conditions Publix operations were profitable during 1930-31 but suffered heavy cash drains, due to theatre purchasing agreements, in 1931-32. A 24 per cent gross decrease was noted last year, as compared with the preceding year.

Recommend Continuance

The receivers declared a forecast as to prospects of the corporation was impossible at this time, but they recommended continuance of the company's business in order that it might either be sold under more favorable conditions or completely reorganized.

Paramount Publix's loss for the nine months ending October 1, 1932, amounted to $7,553,411.18, before allowing for depreciation of fixed assets, and $15,857,344.17 after allowing for such depreciation, the report stated. Advances

FROM CAPITOL HILL WHEN THE INDUSTRY ATTENDED THE INAUGURAL

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

WASHINGTON

MOTION PICTURES united with other great industries of the nation at Washington last Saturday noon, to salute Franklin Delano Roosevelt upon his inauguration as the thirty-second President of the United States. Its representatives from the studios in Hollywood and the home offices of New York, and from the exchanges and theatres of the cities in between, brought a message of goodwill from the art, and an expression of hope that soon the public confidence will be restored.

Never before was the motion picture industry so widely represented at a presidential inaugural, the importance of which, according to veteran political students, superseded all others since Abraham Lincoln took the oath in 1861.

National Democratic Treasurer Frank C. Walker, of Comerford's theatre circuit, led the largest delegation of film folk from New York.

Strolling about the lobby of the Mayflower hotel, Mr. Walker reminisced with members of Mr. Roosevelt's official family, about the old days when he and the late Senator Thomas Walsh were members together of the Montana legislature. Walker had planned to see his old friend sworn in as President Roosevelt's attorney general. He, too, was stunned when he learned of Senator Walsh's sudden death on a train en route to the Capital.

A dozen New York film executives were standing in front of the New Willard hotel on Pennsylvania avenue, awaiting the inaugural procession, when the zeppelin Los Angeles and 120 bombing and pursuit planes, arranged impressively in military formation, zoomed overhead on their way to the White House to salute the new Chief of the Armies.

Charles Leo O'Reilly, president of New York's Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, was on hand early Friday to attend the governor's ball that night. Saturday, he participated in the inaugural ceremonies, dressed in Tammany Hall's best style: silk topper, walking stick, morning coat and boutonniere.

And while almost every one in town Saturday night was talking about the banking situation, $30,000 worth of fireworks was going up in smoke in celebration of the great event.

Harry M. and Major Warner, staunch supporters of the Administration during the recent campaign, attended all of the important inaugural functions. Charlie Einfeld and Andy Smith, both home office executives, went along as aides-de-camp, and so did other Warner officials, including Harry Charnas, Jake Wilk, Joseph Hazen, of the legal department; Sam Sax, Vitaphone producer; Joseph Bernhard, "Skip" Weshner, Jules Levy, Moe Silver, Ralph Budd and Ed Selzer. Harry M. and Major Albert had boxes at the Inaugural Ball, and earlier were guests at Jim Farley's beefsteak.

The influence of a new President is tremendous. Not in many years have so many picture people attended church together on a Sunday morn. They got up early to accompany Mr. Roosevelt to services at St. Thomas', which the Roosevelts attended some 20 years ago when he was assistant secretary of the navy. It was the first time in 30 years that a President of the United States had attended that church.

WASHINGTON TRIES TO CORRAL NEWSREELS

Boy Scouts and police, firemen, soldiers, sailors and marines, secret service men, street cleaners and whatnot were drafted at Washington last Saturday to assist in handling the crowds witnessing the inaugural ceremony and the parade which followed. Precautions such as had never been taken before were ordered to protect the life of the President against repetition of the Zangarra shooting at Florida a few weeks previous.

Included in the preliminary precautionary plan was the decision of Washington's officials to herd together all newsreel cameramen assigned to cover only the President, and place them on a single wooden platform several hundred feet from the official reviewing booth. Also, bars were placed against any newsreel photographer, or still cameraman, riding in the line of march.

Protests against the group platform idea were so vigorous that it was abandoned, and the cameramen were allowed to work independently, but none could go beyond a roped-off section, a few hundred feet from the President. Penalty for violation was cancellation of the special inaugural photographers' pass and probably a bit of roughing at the hands of the secret service men.

NEWSREEL men who were grinding away on the Capitol steps nearly caught the unusual picture of a President taking the oath while the Capitol's flags were at halfmast. The flags had been lowered in memorial to Senator Walsh. Mrs. Henry T. Rainey, wife of the new Speaker of the House, hastily summoned officials and for the duration of the ceremony, all Capitol flags, except that of the Senate, were raised to the top of the staff.

Film folk of the south—Maryland, Washington and Virginia across the Potomac, said that conditions are much worse than officials in New York believe. The discussion had not progressed far before they had us believing that a few dollars in ready cash would buy a 600 seat theatre, two sugar-cured Virginia hams, a few hundred acres of fine farm land right in the line of the next flood, and an option on the Republican National Committee's campaign deficit thrown in for good measure.

William R. Ferguson, who, with Eddie Carrier, supervised Metro's participation in the parade and subsequent festivities, heard one of the hundreds of souvenir-hawkers holler: "Twenty-dollar gold pieces for a dime." Mr. Ferguson, a true Scotchman, was ready to buy a carload. He thought somebody had gone off the gold standard, or sumpin'.

ARNERS had expected to be the sole representative of motion pictures in the inaugural parade. Unknown to the trade, Metro had obtained, quietly, a permit to participate with the local 400-piece children's band of Loew's Fox theatre, and also a battery of camera cars and the flashy studio train, which is now on a goodwill tour of the country.

The crowds—standing five and ten rows deep —cheered both divisions as they marched up Pennsylvania Avenue. Warners' float was called "Better Times" and carried no institutional advertising, either for the company or its motion pictures. "Commercializing the inauguration would not be dignified," said Harry M. Warner. As a matter of fact, commercial advertising was taboo, but, somehow, part of the Metro studio decorations which covered the company's trade-mark were blown away by the heavy wind as the caravan turned into Pennsylvania Avenue.

No one could mistake Metro's ballyhoo. When the long studio train puffed up the avenue, with railroad bell clanging wildly, the crowds in half a dozen spots broke through the heavy cordon of military and police, to inspect it at close range. Hundreds of amateur photographers clicked quickly; officials in the stands applauded enthusiastically, and even cops along the line stood at attention as the trainload of Metro beauties passed by.

Someone in the Warner expedition brought to Washington the story about Tom Mix and a certain pesty young woman in Kansas City. When the Capital-bound train pulled into K. C., the stars were escorted to the Plantation Grill of the Muehlebach, where they were dinner guests. A woman who had partaken of too much stimulant weaved up to Tom and attempted to intrude into the group of notables at the table. "Hello, Tom, old dear," she babbled. "Shay, is it true that shumbody got your horse drunk here in Kansas City?" Mr. Mix gave the woman one cold, disapproving glance and pointedly replied: "No, madame, my horse knows how to behave himself!" And was her face as red as her eyes!

Irving Goodfield, of Apeda studios in New York, which services many of the large film companies, supervised a battery of still cameras which shot activities along Pennsylvania avenue.

Jesse H. Jones, Texas capitalist and financier of many motion picture theatres in that state, sat in on the Tresury meeting Sunday at which the decision was made to declare a national moratorium. Mr. Jones is a member of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The newsreels are said to have spent between $85,000 and $105,000 to cover the event, dispatching entire crews from throughout the East and using dozens of planes to rush through negatives and prints. Like others, the Fox and Hearst combined New York and Washington staffs were on hand. They released a special one-reel picture, which this week took the place of the usual Wednesday release. Special lithographs for theatres were supplied well in advance.

his tripod, during the President's speech. Unable to reach his appointed seat, Secretary Woodin stood by the camera and assisted Dorsey by pointing out, from a manuscript he carried, what portions of the speech were vitally important for the reel.

Metro's Eddie Carrier purchased two crates of oranges which were to be tossed to the crowds from the studio train as a symbol of California. When Eddie heard about the banks closing Saturday morning, he cancelled that plan and kept the oranges for future breakfasts.

Comparatively few business men stayed in town over the weekend. Scores of picture people joined the crowds which followed Al Smith back to New York beginning 6:30 Saturday evening. They seemed to be more interested in the banking situation at home than in the Inaugural Ball, which not even President Roosevelt attended.

The newsreels of the inaugural were the first sound pictures of a Presidential inauguration ever shown. Sound for newsreels was in an embryonic state at the last inaugural four years ago.

Heavy Phil Di Angelis, who billposts for most of the large motion picture companies in New York, rode triumphantly into the parade on a full-blooded Democratic Donkey. Mr. Di Angelis later admitted that this was more Democratic than democratic. He rode only half a mile when the "donk" caved in under Phil's 290 pound pressure.

Exhibitors are not alone in labor troubles. Carpenters employed to build the stands were paid $11 a day. They were offered $8 but refused to work and the municipal officials were compelled to pay the higher scale, depression or no.

NOT TO BE OUTDONE by Cowboy Tom Mix, who rode the full length of the parade on his new white pony, funny Eddie Dowling got himself a large brewery nag, and, bedecked more formally than Mr. Mix, in silk top hat and striped trousers, galloped heavily past President Roosevelt's reviewing booth, which, incidentally, was enclosed with bullet-proof glass to protect the Executive from any further Zangarra incident.

When Mix reached Mr. Roosevelt, he left the procession, and, riding up to within a few feet of the President, bowed gracefully. The horse did likewise, bending on both knees. Mr. Roosevelt was obviously quite impressed. Mr. Dowling's stallion, however, was not so accomplished, nor polished, and Eddie rode right by, eager to leave well enough alone.

Mr. Dowling participated prominently in the Roosevelt campaign last fall, as head of entertainment activities.

Both national exhibitor organizations had official representation: Chairman Abram F. Myers, for Allied States Association, and Michael J. O'Toole, for the MPTOA.

The film group stopping at the New Willard hotel was one of the first to learn, on Saturday, that the Administration was about to declare a national banking holiday. This was not officially announced until some 24 hours later, on Sunday evening.

One of the few who sat in the special Presidential reviewing stand was Nate Golden, assistant chief of the Motion Picture Division of the Department of Commerce.

Film executives of the East who were not in Washington Saturday night were frolicing at the Motion Picture "Inaugural Ball" at New York's Waldorf-Astoria. And, while the new President was receiving congratulations of film folk at Washington, ex-President Hoover was resting quietly, and comparatively alone, on an upper floor of the Waldorf, above the din of the crowd at the ball.

The newsreels guarded their strategy for covering the event as jealously as opposing generals, and when it was all over, new records had been shattered and Cameraman Jess Kizis, of Truman Talley's Fox staff in New York, was lying in an emergency hospital, crippled. It appears that Mr. Kizis, flying in a blimp, lost two fingers when, throwing a can of film to the ground to a waiting messenger, a back wash from one of the propellers threw him off his balance and he fell into the whirling blade. The crew in the blimp applied a tourniquet to stop bleeding and Kizis flew through the entire inauguration ceremony, staying in the air for an hour after the accident in order to complete his pictures.

Paramount News explained the importance of the newsreel pictures of the inauguration to Europe, and the French Line agreed to hold up the sailing of the steamer Paris from noon on Saturday until three o'clock. This allowed Paramount to use an amphibian, fly out from New York and overtake the Paris at sea, where a complete negative for Europe was dropped aboard.

Exhibitors on hand were quite envious over the ticket sell-out in all reviewing stands, both public and private. Tickets were priced from $2 to $7 in the official stands, while owners of private buildings, residences and the like, charged $10 each for seats in stands which they had erected in front of their properties. The official stands were built by merchants of the town, who contributed $100,000 for the purpose. They were reimbursed later, however, proportionately, with money collected from tickets. (Photo below by Apeda)

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

Out All Night

(Universal)

Comedy

Fun, intimate and intriguing, is the big audience appealing angle. Comedy, ranging all the way from a subtle brand, through hokum side issues to slapstick variety, is the dominating highlight. Yet the show is so constructed and situations and dialogue are so presented that a novel brand of suspense is equally important. All expertly combined, they provide a laugh-provoking yarn that held the preview crowd's interest so that even in the slower moments they were on the alert for the next exciting development, indication that this latest Summerville-Pitts romance episode should experience little difficulty in becoming popular in both big city and small town houses.

All the players have important roles, while sympathy is gathered to the wistful Ronald-Bunny duo, eternally bedeviled by the loving mother. Based on the idea that her husky mature son is still a weakling baby, Mrs. Colgate continually doses him with medicine. The picture moves into a department store where the mother, ably and hilariously aided by the "sell-at-any-price" merchant, Rosemountain, rigs Ronald in an overcoat that fits him like a circus tent would a dwarf.

Accidentally meeting Bunny, the store child matron, love dawns for Ronald, but the path of romance is anything but rosy as the mother sits in and dominates all meetings. Their marriage is a catastrophe for her, but when she shows up in the honeymooner's paradise to share their nuptial happiness, laughter is intense, and it breaks all bounds when after an unending evening in which Bunny's faith in love is sheatered, Ronald goes to bed with a hot water bottle and she packs up her duds (mostly nighties) and goes back home.

The locale shifts to a big city's Chinatown, where Kate and Arnold frame a gag to have Bunny abducted by a gang of highbinders before Ronald's eyes. Leaping from his invalid's chair, much to his startled mother's amazement, Ronald first discovers he possesses a terrific punch. Raging through the dens, underground passages, trap door rooms and whatnot, kayoing one "hard guy" after another, he "saves" the girl from a horrible fate. Plenty of fun, fear, fright, terror and action, which the audience understands is all a joke, characterize these scenes which give Ronald the courage to throw off his mother's benighting yoke and starting for Niagara Falls and a real honeymoon with Bunny.

Chief selling points are: Summerville and Pitts at their best; rib-tickling comedy; the mother-in-law complex—an idea which suggests a natural showmanship line, "she went on her son's honeymoon"—entertainment for the whole family.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned. —THE EDITOR

Murders in the Zoo

Thriller

If your audiences are favorably inclined towards melodramatic horror pictures, "Murders in the Zoo" should hit them in the right spot. It's an out and out shocker. There is but little mystery. It stresses to the utmost every attempt to inspire fear, thrills and terror. Presenting its villain as a calculating, ruthless killer, a clever discoverer of horrible methods of slaying his victims, no novel means of raising goose-flesh and provoking shrieks has been overlooked, apparently. Comedy relief is offered; romance and love interest are of secondary importance, serving principally as the basis for further shocks; sympathy for any of the characters is stimulated by audience anticipation as to whether, when and how they may be killed. The title is a direct tip-off as to locale and theme.

Gorman's first victim dies in the jungle, devoured by tigers, after Gorman has sewed up his mouth as a penalty for becoming unduly affectionate towards Evelyn. Hewitt is the next victim. He, too, is suspicioned, rightly, by Gorman of becoming enamored of Evelyn. He dies by a snake bite during a dinner in the Zoo. Evelyn is next. After learning how her husband killed Hewitt—the severed head of a mamba snake—she is on the way back to the zoo with her evidence. Alligators account for her as Gorman stands by. Gorman tries to kill Dr. Woodford after Woodford has ascertained that the span of the real mamba's fangs do not check with the record of the wound on Hewitt's leg. An antidote which Woodford has concocted, administered by Jerry, saves his life.

Trapped in the Zoo as Jerry causes a general alarm to be sounded, Gorman frees all the animals. He backs into a boa constrictor's cage and is crushed to death.

The comedy part is presented by Yates as press agent for the Zoo. Other angles are the interest that accrues to Professor Evans, curator, in his efforts to save the collection of animals for the city's children; the accepted romance between Woodford and Jerry.

It's pretty strong. There is no doubt that it packs a certain entertainment punch. The men in the preview audience seemed to appreciate the ruthless Gorman and the comic Yates, with the animal element. The women, as could be expected, did the gasping, and according to their comments they seemed to agree that it was a little too brutal for feminine appreciation. While the youngsters probably will want to see it, you will have your problems in presenting it to them in such a way that parents will not come back with objections. However, by concentrating on announcements that emphasize the thrill, terror and melodrama of the show, you can count on capturing the interest of the thrill seekers and at the same time those who are not so strong for this type of picture will know what to expect.

The picture suggests ample opportunities for startling exploitation in which ideas based on snake and alligator angles can get you away from the lion-tiger exhibitions which may have become too common through their use in connection with other current animal pictures.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Broadway Bad

(Fox)

Drama

With Joan Blondell and Ricardo Cortez for the marquee, and Ginger Rogers and Adrienne Ames in support, and a combination of gold-digging show girls, penthouses and mother love for story theme and catch lines, "Broadway Bad" contrives to be moderately entertaining, reasonably well constructed. Its appeal necessarily is more definitely to the feminine patronage, with an emphasis on the behind-the-scenes show angle, the broad-mindedness of Cortez important as a possible means of attracting a sizable representation of the other sex.

This must rank as regular run film fare, having but little to bring it above the average in construction, performance, story or development. The work of Miss Blondell and Cortez merits attention, Cortez being particularly smooth in his performance. Where Miss Blondell has her friends her name will of itself attract a goodly portion of patronage.

Attracting the attention of Cortez, millionaire and show backer, she is given a chorus opportunity. In a hasty affair, she marries Allen Vincent, wealthy college boy, who later misunderstands the attention of Cortez, not knowing she is married, pays to her. A divorce is obtained, Miss Blondell goes in for gold-digging on a large and successful scale, while the notoriety resulting from the divorce brings her name to top lights on the musical stage.

Upon her hidden child she lavishes all the affection possible, until Vincent, in a crooked deal, and in need of money, attempts blackmail, tries to take the child from her by legal means on the grounds of unfitness, when she becomes the fighting mother, about to be bereft of her offspring. In court the judge is about to award the child to its father, Vincent, when she declares it not his but that of Cortez, a misrepresentation in which Cortez, seated among the spectators, acquiesces with a nod. Case dismissed, and the rest is left to the imagination.

JANUARY BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS

● Of the seven productions rating mention as the Box Office Champions for January, five are straight dramas of distinctly serious appeal emotionally. Of the remaining two, one is a musical extravaganza with comic qualities represented by the star (Eddie Cantor). Only one comes under the usual classification of comedy. Two pictures tied for third place ("A Farewell to Arms" and "Silver Dollar"), while two others ("The Sign of the Cross" and "They Just Had to Get Married") turned in grosses ranking each as fifth.

Miss Blondell is here seen in a somewhat different role than her audience expects for her, that of a mother, with the gold-digging pursued relentlessly only as a means of providing the best of care for the child. This becomes an angle worth capitalizing in selling the picture. There is nothing here that could interest children.—Aaronson, New York.

What Price Decency?

(Equitable)

Drama

This picture, from the newly formed subsidiary of Majestic Pictures, offers little of merit, and can be considered as a possibility for exhibition in only the more inconspicuous of the smaller houses of the country.

The New York theatre which played the film utilized a method of lobby advertising stressing the "spiciness, the daring," the so-and-so of the picture's theme. Nothing more unjustified by actual content could readily be imagined. This instance is here mentioned merely to indicate what not to do in selling the picture.

It is true that the girl in the case, played with a valiant effort to appear reasonable by Dorothy Burgess, is initially understood to be a street walker, but that in no sense justifies the use of the term "spicy" or any similar implication. A boat she is on moves out before she can get off. She believes she is married to Alan Hale, who tries hard to be a brutal Dutch pearl gatherer—and thief—in Africa. Taking her there and treating her with all the disrespect to be traditionally expected of the fictional brute, she languishes, sighs, curses her luck and her supposed husband, until Walter Byron, in shining putttees and Irish brogue, arrives on the scene, entrances the girl in a ridiculous scene in the "parlour" of the mosquito ridden, damp and fictitious-looking shack, and plans to take her away to happiness.

Of course he does that, after she has thrashed her husband with a great whip he used on his natives, and he with an accurately tossed native spear in his midriff, and blinded by the lash, overturns an oil lamp, while the couple go on to happiness.

The girl, refusing to go with Byron because she believes she is married to Hale, is indicated as striving, despite temptations, to establish for herself a right to decency. That is the only feasible selling line in the story, the cast names, of course, being inconclusive from a box office standpoint. A tiny monkey, Zeppo by name, takes histrionic honors. There is no good reason why the youngsters should be disturbed at their games.—Aaronson, New York.

A Kiss Before the Mirror

(Universal)

Drama

Being straight drama, story interest is the outstanding factor in "A Kiss Before the Mirror." Because of the moralistic motivating theme, the show is essentially for adults. More than anything else it is a woman's picture, yet by cagily capitalizing on the elements that intrigue feminine patrons, points that will stimulate the curiosity of men can be brought out.

Trailing his wife to her lover's apartment, Walter kills her. Immediately he surrenders to the police. His lawyer friend, Held, offers his services as attorney and after much prying learns the complete reason for the crime. Relating the crime to his own wife, Maria, Held is amazed to see her going through the same routine—making herself alluring and beautiful—as he had learned from Walter that Lucy had done before the killing.

Strangely affected by the coincidence and further upset when Maria insists that he remain at home while she goes out, he follows her and sees her in a clandestine meeting with her lover. He covers up his knowledge, but insists that his wife accompany him to the courtroom. Fearful that her husband has found out something, Maria is highly nervous. Held presents his argument to the jury. Dramatically he bases his plea on the "unwritten law," the right of a man to protect the sanctity of his home. Climaxing his argument, he suddenly pulls a pistol. Maria screams and faints. Walter is acquitted. Husband and wife are reconciled.

Audience interest will be centered in the drama. This can probably be best brought home by a straight-from-the-shoulder campaign, one that takes every advantage of the popular idea of the unwritten law. This can be further strengthened by adapting the idea of Held's jury plea for his friend, while having his own wife on trial. It might be interesting to adapt the Paramount gag of "The Woman Accused" and break the picture after the pistol pulling incident and give the audience a minute to form its own opinion as to what is going to happen.

Nancy Carroll, Paul Lukas and Frank Morgan naturally are the names to use, but selling the story on as personal direct basis as possible looks to be the best way of exciting interest.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Racetrack

(World Wide)

Drama

There is punch, a number of laughs and a sob or two here which combine to make this good entertainment, lively fare, a picture which they all may see without let or hindrance, and most of them enjoy. It is more readily adaptable for the lesser house, but there it should perform satisfactorily from the financial standpoint.

There is ample room for ballyhoo in the theme, its background and the human interest involved. The picture gains immeasurably through its quality of being rather more than a racetrack story of horses, action and track machinations, though those factors have provided an opportunity, not neglected, for several fast action sequences among the ponies and their jockeys. It is, at the same time, a story of an orphaned boy, befriended and adopted by a not too scrupulous bookie, who makes every effort to keep the lad straight and finally takes drastic measures to insure his future, not on the racetrack.

Competently has the atmosphere of the paddock, the races, the thronging excited crowds been instilled into the picture, making for an appealing background. The lobby may well be decorated in keeping with that background, transformed into a replica of the track, the box office an entrance gate.

The names are reasonably good, led by Leo Carrillo, in his familiar characterization of the Italian, this time as a bookie, the accent providing amusement through his garbling of the English language. Junior Coghlan is the boy, Lee Hammond, Carrillo's partner. Satisfactorily Kay Hammond, Huntley Gordon and others support them.

There should be a real play for child patronage, since the story prominently features the boy, and the film's atmosphere, action are of the type to arouse the interest, insure the enjoyment of every boy. The other angles offer an opportunity to appeal to adults, particularly the feminine contingent. The family may see the picture.—Aaronson, New York.

There Goes the Bride

(Gaumont British)

Comedy

[The review below, recently received from Bernard Charman in London, becomes particularly pertinent with the opening of the picture at the Roxy in New York this week.]

Take the plot of "Monte Carlo," twist it about a little, alter the settings and cast it with English players, and, voila!—"There Goes the Bride." And, if the analogy is to be continued, there is little to choose between them in standard of excellence. Audiences whose tastes run in the direction of light comedy, with a sprinkling of music to bring out the full flavor, will find this one much to their liking: it is, in fact, good film fare.

The British studios lately have shown a distinct leaning toward this type of production. One of the secrets of their success is the choice of players, especially girls. A more suitable choice of lead than Jessie Matthews (one of London's best known stage exponents of musical comedy) would be hard to find

You will have no difficulty in exploiting a story which treats of a bride running away on her wedding day, with all the attendant excitement of the hunt for her as well as her own adventures with the handsome man she meets on the train.

Mr. Director de Courville contantly is knocking the audience's funny bone with unexpected touches. By this means, and with the energy of the actors, the speed of the action is well sustained; it is no exaggeration to say that there is not a dull frame in the whole 7,200 feet of the film. You've every reason for promising your customers plenty of laughs.—Charman, London.

BRING THEM BACK BY THE MILLION!!

(No. 712 Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Pictures Corporation)

I CAN HARDLY WAIT UNTIL YOU SEE "BE MINE TONIGHT."

I AM THRILLED TO THE BOTTOM OF MY HEART TO BE THE ONE WHO offers it to you. Universal never scooped the whole industry so completely as it did when it bought the rights to "one of the grandest talking pictures" in the history of the business.

JUST AS CHAMPAGNE IS SUPERIOR TO BEER, SO IS "BE MINE TONIGHT" superior to the vast majority of picture entertainment.

IN FACT, WALTER WEBSTER, ONE OF THE HARDEST-TO-PLEASE AND one of the most famous critics in the world, so far lost himself after seeing "Be Mine Tonight" that he wrote these words about it:

"I COMMEND TO YOUR ATTENTION TODAY ONE OF THE GRANDEST talking pictures any one of us is likely to see. In the past four years we have had a number of outstanding talking pictures, but none in the same class as 'Be Mine Tonight'."

YOU NEVER HEARD OF THE LEADING MAN BEFORE, BUT YOU AND your fans will "discover" him and tell the world about him.

AS FOR THE LEADING YOUNG WOMAN, MR. WEBSTER SAYS OF HER, "She is a girl of nineteen who is a discovery of discoveries."

HE FURTHER SAYS, "THE DIRECTOR IS A YOUNG RUSSIAN EXILE WHO tomorrow will be famous."

THIS PICTURE SIMPLY TURNS YOUR OLD, PRECONCEIVED IDEAS OF entertainment upside down. You don't have to try to fool anyone about it. You can tell everybody that the cast is unknown, but that you want all of your regular customers to participate in the discovery of delicious new screen attractions.

ONCE MORE LET ME QUOTE FROM MR. WEBSTER, AND PLEASE WEIGH every word carefully: "This film is both distinguished and different. It may very easily turn out to be the one inspiring production for which the film world has been looking to restore to full vigor the presently somewhat diminished zest of film-going."

WHAT GREATER PROMISE COULD ANY PICTURE HOLD OUT TO THE people who yearn for the new, the different, the better?

BRING THEM BACK BY THE MILLION . . . BRING THEM BACK WITH something which will fire them with the old interest in movies.

DO IT WITH "BE MINE TONIGHT."

The Voice of the Vatican

Lenten Special

Designed as a special short subject appropriate to the current Lenten season, and understood available now at all Universal exchanges, this material is of real interest to those whose leanings are in the Vatican direction. Shown are the Vatican grounds, its railroad, picturesque Swiss Guards, the visit of Mussolini, King Victor Emmanuel and the Queen, following the signing of the famed Lateran Treaty, making the Papal state independent. At the dedication of the Vatican's short wave radio station, Marconi's speech is followed by a short talk by the Pope. Interesting is the working of the famed mosaic experts, in the school reestablished recently by Pope Pius. In certain sections, this may warrant special billing.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Vintagers' Festival in the Palatinate

(Mary Warner)

Diverting

The mind of the American public should feel strangely drawn to the subject matter of this German-produced short, released in this country by Mary Warner. It goes into scenically effective detail in the making of wine, that ripe vintage often of the grape. Superimposed titles and the absence of German dialogue serve to make the film adaptable to any theatre. As a travelogue type of short, it is interesting material.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Screen Souvenirs

(Paramount)

Fair

A flash of the inaugural parade for President McKinley is a highlight of this screen souvenir. Another interesting shot is that of the old-time Long Island firemen marching, resplendent in their helmets and long frock coats. The usual comedy finish, this one starring Francis X. Bushman, is not particularly funny. The off-screen dialogue is not up to its usual standard, possibly because the subject does not give much opportunity for cleverness.—Running time, 10 minutes.

So This Is Harris

(RKO Radio)

Musical Comedy

Phil Harris, band leader and one of that contemporary species of humanity, the crooner, herein takes the spotlight, surrounded by dancing couples, dancing chorus girls, and the comedy provided by Walter Catlett. Catlett's wife raves about Harris, while Catlett just raves. Catlett meets Harris on the golf links, likes him and Catlett takes over a girl waiting to meet Harris. Harris is sent to take care of the girl's friend, and it is not until later that Catlett discovers the other girl is his wife. A long short, it has moments of comedy, attractive tunes and girls and crooning for those that like it.—Running time, 28 minutes.

Block and Tackle

Graphic

Slow motion and standard speed, abetted by characteristic Pete Smith dialoguing, reveal many of the intricacies of modern football line work, which the ordinary gridiron fan misses in his anxiety to follow the man with the ball. Dick Hanley's coaching school and the Northwestern University football team, featuring its big star, "Pug" Rentner, are the media used to show the necessity of smart blocking and tackling in making spectacular football look good. How various trick plays get under way and go through are graphically illustrated. Running time, 12 minutes.—McCarthy, Hollywood

Hunting Trouble

Slapstick

Louise Fazenda makes frantic efforts to be amusing, and succeeds to a certain extent, but the whole piece is an interminable round of slapstick. If your audience likes that sort of thing, this comedy will go over. Miss Fazenda gets a dog for her husband's birthday and he and the butler overhear her conversation, think she has a lover. Dog stealers appear and the hectic, gun-shooting pursuit roars through the house to an expected conclusion.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Hollywood on Parade

Weak

Another in an often interesting series, this one shows lack of imagination. With "Skeets" Gallagher at the microphone, a number of dance orchestras are introduced for no reason and in a manner which strains for humor. One orchestra plays a Russian "overture" amid falling snow. Costumes are in keeping. Three of the four Marxes, who have been known to be very funny, spend a few minutes "sleeping" in deck chairs on the beach, slapping each other a dozen times and concluding with resounding dives into a nearby pool.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Leningrad—The Gateway To Soviet Russia

(MGM)

Interesting

Interesting after the fashion of the travel short is this subject of the well-done FitzPatrick Traveltalk series. In closeup and otherwise are pictured the scenes and representative individuals who people the vast city which once was St. Petersburg. Stately palaces and churches, now museums; modernistic apartment houses, children half-dressed for reasons of health in nurseries are seen. The last vestige of the Czarist regime appears in the old droshky drivers, in their ancient vehicles, too old to adjust themselves to a new era.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Women's Work

Fair

There is of course particular appeal for women in this subject of the Hodge Podge series, in which the roving camera has recorded, with reasonable diversification, the manner in which the feminine element of various nations chiefly employs its time. Greater effect might well have been achieved by a more complete concentration on the work of certain groups, rather than the numerous and necessarily hasty glimpses afforded. However, the subject is of reasonably general interest. Running time, 9 minutes.

An Old Spanish Custom

Intense

Pictured with dramatic execution is the national sport of nearly all Spanish countries, the bull fight. Slow motion emphasizes the skill of the matadors as they gracefully dodge the onrush of the great bull, the while enraging the animal with their flaunting capes. Seen also are the training school for the young matadors and the farm where the bulls are brought to the proper weight and ferocity for the ring. The accompanying explanation is rendered by Ralph De Alberich, with a marked Spanish accent to his English and a measure of humor well spoken and well placed.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Bankruptcy Bill Is Law; Corporation Relief Dropped

With the corporation relief provision eliminated by the Senate, the bankruptcy bill is now law, signed by Herbert Hoover as one of the last acts of his administration. The bill was rescued from the legislative jam of the last Congress at closing, but after passing in the House it had been emasculated of its plan for reorganization of corporations unable to meet their debts. The measure provides for reorganization of railroads and extends relief for farmers.

to and investments in subsidiary and affiliated companies are listed as follows:

Balaban & Katz, $20,000,000; Dent Theatres, $1,750,000; Olympia Theatres, $10,000,000; Publix Enterprises, $15,000,000; Minnesota Amusement Co., $2,500,000; Publix Northwest Theatres, $5,000,000; Saenger Theatres, $7,500,000; Famous Players Canadian Corp., $17,000,000; Pencom Corp. (holding stock of the Comerford-Publix Corp. and Comerford Publix Theatres), $6,000,000.

Dent Theatres, Inc., showed a loss in operations, after all charges, of approximately $122,300 during 1932. Famous Players Canadian Corp. showed a preliminary profit of $154,989 last year. The Pencom Corp. showed a loss of $562,696; Olympia Theatres is now in receivership; Publix Enterprises, Inc., is in bankruptcy and the Minnesota Amusement Co. is in receivership. Publix Northwest Theatres, Inc., showed a loss of $1,501,710 after all charges during 1932. The Saenger Theatres are in receivership.

Among the accounts receivable, the report stated, there is a claim for $456,210 against Fox Film Corp. for leases of west coast theatres dated in 1930. The report declares that in the receivers' opinion this account cannot be collected without litigation.

The company's balance sheet shows liabilities, including accounts payable other than to subsidiary and affiliated companies and purchase obligations, amounting to $2,649,417, including a disputed tax claim of nearly $300,000. Purchase money obligations aggregated $2,068,784. This is primarily a balance owing on the stock of the Olympia Theatres, Inc., and approximately $1,000,000 of the sum was payable within the present year. Funded debt, represented by the two debenture issues of the corporation aggregated $25,043,000. Contingent liabilities include $13,368,932 to 12 banks on the notes of Film Production Corp.

Economies of $23,047,000 were reported made during 1932. Largely through the elimination of surplus employment and salary reductions. Weekly costs of home office and field operations were $59,000 in December, 1931, $34,000 in 1932 and is less now, the creditors were told.

Mr. Hilles revealed that negotiations for the retransfer to Paramount Publix of the $13,000,000 bank loan account are under way due to the opinion of counsel for the receivers that assumption of the account by Paramount Pictures Corp., newly organized subsidiary, might be construed to give the bankers a preference over other creditors of Paramount Publix.

The corporation owns the stock of 450 theatre and theatre holding companies and has an interest in more than 1,100 theatres in the United States, 175 in Canada and 26 in other parts of the world, the report said.

Robert S. Levy's suit to cancel the allegedly fraudulent conveyance by Paramount Publix Corp. to Film Production Corp. of all its "quick" assets, 23 feature pictures and the proceeds from rentals on these films, will go to the New York Appellate division within several days. Samuel Zirn, counsel in the Levy action, interrupted Mr. Hilles' reading of the report with an attempt to obtain replies to 15 questions from Mr. Zukor, which, he said, had remained unanswered since they were first mailed to Mr. Zukor some time ago. Most of the questions had to do with internal financial transactions of Paramount and with Mr. Zukor's personal financial interest in the company. Mr. Zirn said that his client, Mr. Levy, would later attack the Paramount receivership as "collusive and improper" and would contest the qualification of Mr. Zukor for the post of permanent receiver. Mr. Levy, who is a holder of Paramount-Publix gold bonds, and is suing in that capacity, has filed notice that he is appealing to the appellate division from the order entered in the case February 3 by Supreme Court Judge Richard P. Lydon. Mr. Levy's objections were enumerated by him as follows:

1. Failure to appoint a temporary receiver for the 23 films, their rentals and profits therefrom.

2. Failure to enjoin Paramount Publix, temporarily, pending trial, from paying to its banker-creditors the proceeds from rentals of the films.

3. Failure to enjoin the Chase National Bank from committing any action which might impair the value of the protective provisions in favor of the bondholders, contained in the original trust indenture, dated Aug. 1, 1930.

4. Denial to the plaintiff of the right to examine Adolph Zukor, president, and other officers of Paramount Publix before trial of Levy's action.

5. Permission to Paramount Publix to pay interest to all the 12 banks to which it owes money, pending trial of the action.

The report of the receivers states that there are pending seven suits attacking the transfer of the 23 pictures. Six of them are in state courts and one is in federal court.

Mr. Hilles indicated that the industry looks for no further theatre chain bankruptcies and that the bankruptcy of Publix Enterprises was the last of the big ones. George Topliff, the Irving Trust receiver appointee in Publix Enterprises, is understood to be hopeful of salvaging an important majority of the theatres through bankruptcy reorganization. Meanwhile, all operation will continue in a normal manner. A meeting of creditors of Publix Enterprises, scheduled for this week at the offices of Henry K. Davis, referee in bankruptcy, was adjourned Tuesday to March 20 by Referee Davis.

In New Orleans, protective committees were formed last week for the deposit of three classes of Saenger bonds. This action was said to be the result of appointment of E. V. Richards as receiver for Saenger Realty Corp., following a petition by Paramount Distribution Corp. which claimed $33,000 in film rentals. Saenger Realty Corp. is said to have outstanding obligations amounting to $1,000,000. The protective committees will handle the deposit of the 6½ per cent serial gold bonds of Saenger Realty issued for the Saenger theatre at Mobile, the 6½ per cent serial gold bonds for the New Orleans Saenger theatre and the 6½ per cent gold bonds, series A and B, of Saenger Theatres, Inc. W. G. Austin, an accountant, was appointed receiver for the Mobile interests in Mobile federal court this week.

In Chicago this week, Balaban & Katz directors omitted the regular dividend of $1.75 on their preferred stock. At a meeting of the directorate board, membership was reduced from nine to five, leaving a revised roster including Barney Balaban, John Balaban, Charles McCullough, Walter Immerman and Sam Dembow, Jr.

The first meeting of Publix-Ohio creditors, for the purpose of proving claims and appointing a trustee, will be held in Toledo at United States district court March 13, according to a notice mailed by Fred H. Kruse, referee in bankruptcy.

The first meeting of creditors of A. H. Blank Theatre Corp. of Nebraska and Publix-Nebraska, Inc., will be held March 14, Herman Aye, referee, announced at Omaha.

Wampas, on Coast, Elect George Landy as President

George Landy was elected president of the Wampas, Coast organization, at the annual meeting held last week. Other officers elected were: Lincoln Quarburg, vice president; Sam Cohn, second vice-president; Teet Carle, secretary; Andy Hervey, treasurer; Roland McCurdy, sergeant-at-arms. Directors include John LeRoy Johnston, Joseph Reddy, George Thomas, Phil Gersdorf, Wilson Heller, John Miles, Frank Whitbeck (ex-officio).

THE DICTATORSHIP OF ROOSEVELT

A lot of us have been asking for a dictator. Now we have one.

His name is not Mussolini or Stalin or Hitler. It is Roosevelt. He wasn't made dictator by Black Shirts or Brown Shirts or Bolsheviks beating down oppositior in street fights and civil war. H was chosen by popular vote in regular election.

But he is a dictator just t same. Invoking the war-time pow of the Presidency, Mr. Roosevel his first forty-eight hours in has ordered a nation-wide bank day, embargoed gold, made gol silver hoarders outlaws, and th
125,000,000 people temporarily

Italy Hails Our Dictator.

It is estimated that there are 70,000 words in the Italian language, but they fail the Italian press in expressing joy at the magnificent tribute which President ROOSEVELT has paid to the Fascist idea by constituting himself a "dictator." The editors recall the proud Mussolinian phrase: "Where we have shown the way, others will follow."

Something, to be sure, remains to be done before Fascism in the United States presents a perfect replica of the original model. It detracts considerably from Mr. ROOSEVELT as dictator that he should have been elected to the job by an overwhelming popular majority. It would have been much nearer the

British Royalty Go to Talkie For First Time to Aid Poor

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
LONDON, Feb. 28.—The royal standard was flown over a motion-picture theatre for the first time this afternoon when King George and Queen Mary saw their first talkie film at the première of "The Good Companions," a British film based on J. B. Priestley's best seller.

The director, Victor Saville, was presented to the King and Queen afterward and they congratulated him on the production. They laughed heartily at one of Walt Disney's "Silly Symphonies," which also was shown.

The top price for seats was ten guineas (about $36) and more than £6,000 (about $21,000) was realized for charity.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Allied

THE BOILING POINT: Hoot Gibson, Helen Foster—Good Western. If anybody has got the blues they should see this western. Recording not so good. Played Feb. 17-18. Running time, 54 minutes.—Wm. Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Small town patronage.

SPIRIT OF THE WEST: Hoot Gibson—Hoot's best story to date. You won't blush when the children come out. Played Feb. 17-18.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

Columbia

AIR HOSTESS: Evalyn Knapp, James Murray—A mighty fine little picture. This is the kind of air picture that the big producers have been calling specials. Has a fine story, a great bunch of fine actors, plenty of thrills, and is a far better than average program picture. We have had all of the air pictures that our town will absorb, so did not do so well with this one, but if your people will go for an air picture try and get them out to see this one. It's a fine show. Couple of pretty raw scenes between Todd and Murray. The dialogue smokes a couple of times. Played Feb. 21. Running time, 67 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

DECEPTION: Thelma Todd, Leo Carrillo—Terrible title and terrible business. Had some lovers of wrestling sport interested enough to come out but the ladies must have all played bridge or jig-saw puzzles, for our crowd looked like a private stag party on this one. Running time, 65 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

McKENNA OF THE MOUNTED: Buck Jones—Excellent western in sound, story and photography; has plenty of appeal for advertising in Canada. Business above average. Played Jan. 26-27-28.—V. W. Fisk, Blue Water Theatre, Kincardine, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND: Lee Tracy, Constance Cummings—The present normal business on this, no extra. Everyone liked it we know. Especially liked was Tracy. Guess most folks not much interested in politics though. They don't relish being told face-to-face what a bunch of dumbbells we seem to be. Running time, 80 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

THE WESTERN CODE: Tim McCoy—A splendid western picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

THE WESTERN CODE: Tim McCoy, Nora Lane—Another Tim McCoy western. Just as good as the ones before. Plenty of action and gunplay. Played Feb. 11.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

First National

BLONDIE JOHNSON: Joan Blondell, Chester Morris—A good show with a new slant on the racket. Blondell comedy great. Chester Morris gives a good performance. Does not come up to standard but Blondell has a good following and should go over. No trouble here. Played Feb. 22-23. Running time, 65 minutes.—Wm. Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Small town patronage.

CENTRAL PARK: Joan Blondell—Joan Blondell great. If they have all the stories in Hollywood they claim they have, I don't know why they used this one.—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Neb. General patronage.

CENTRAL PARK: Joan Blondell—We did a very poor business with this one, but those who came thought it fairly good entertainment. It's plenty exciting in spots, has some good acting but never gets above the program class, and it's just another picture that runs less than one hour. Played Feb. 22-23. Running time, 55 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

EMPLOYEES ENTRANCE: Warren William, Loretta Young—Good picture. Should do good any place where they like Warren William. In this town they do not care for him. Loretta Young very good. One thing about First National pictures, they have very good music in their pictures. For a comeback for Alice White she is very good. She has started out good, if she will only keep it up. Played Feb. 13-14. Running time, 74 minutes.—Wm. Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Small town patronage.

EMPLOYEES ENTRANCE: Warren William, Loretta Young—A very good picture from First National. William as the hard boiled department store owner was about the meanest man that ever lived. Young and Alice White played their parts well. Picture pleasing. Played Feb. 15. Running time, 72 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

1790 Broadway, New York

FRISCO JENNY: Ruth Chatterton—This brings our "Ruthie" right back to the hearts of her countrymen. At last she has a story worthy of her ability. Hope the Brothers keep Ruth out of that sophisticated stuff and think they will after her work in this. Played Feb. 17.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

THE MATCH KING: Warren William—Fell below our present usual business. William the whole show. Usual type story and well liked by those who ventured out. Lili Damita didn't impress much. Hasn't any appeal to classify it as a "special" at all. Running time, 76 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

THE MATCH KING: Warren William—A good big picture. Interesting story and well produced. Satisfied all we got. Played Feb. 19-20.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson—A swell show. Robinson is a wonder. Really a four-star picture. Bebe Daniels not so "hot." Running time, 65 minutes.—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Neb. General patronage.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson—Certainly a great picture by a great artist. A 100 per cent satisfaction. Played Feb. 12-13.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

THEY CALL IT SIN: Loretta Young, George Brent—A very good entertaining ipcture. The stars and cast extra good. Satisfied all. Played Feb. 16-17.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

YOU SAID A MOUTHFUL: Joe E. Brown—Got them in on Sunday. Why say any more.—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Neb. General patronage.

YOU SAID A MOUTHFUL: Joe E. Brown—This brought increased attendance, both adults and children. The critics could pick this to pieces but our audience ate this up with relish to the last crumb. Delightful nonsense, clean and wholesome. Cleverly and artistically done.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Fox

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Drew a little better than usual business for today. Brought out a few folks (older ones) who wanted to see Clara again. Story overlooked and not commented on because Clara carries the whole show in great style. Many comments that it's well that Clara is back all right. Was surprised that we didn't get more younger couples. Running time, 82 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Here is a fine picture, and Clara Bow certainly played the part assigned to her in the manner it should have been played. But I am sorry to have to report that Clara staged no comeback at the box office for us. We did a very poor business. When you play "Call Her Savage" get behind it for you have a great show, and it's not a "raw" picture. Played Feb. 18-19. Running time, 88 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—The best patronage drawing production we have had for many weeks. I call it a knockout. Good for any class of patrons. Played Feb. 18.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small county patronage.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe, Bela Lugosi—This picture is well done but the magic stuff is a little impossible and stretches the imagination a lot. Despite the fact that it was plugged on the radio it did only ordinary business. They must have been listening in on the radio when we played it.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers, Irene Rich—Our usual midweek kind of business but no draw. We didn't see many of our young folks out. Just the older folks who undoubtedly liked Rogers very much, not as an actor but for the man he really is. Story well liked. Running time, 80 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

THE GOLDEN WEST: George O'Brien—One nice piece of entertainment, if your crowd doesn't like pictures depicting loose morals and vulgarity glorified. Play it any Friday and Saturday.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

HOT PEPPER: Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen, Lupe Velez—The next amendment in our constitution should be one prohibiting any film company from making such a picture as "Hot Pepper." Let no one tell you that this is another "What Price Glory" or "Cock-Eyed World." It's just a lot of rawness that should never have been released. We did a fair business first day and it died on us the next two and were we glad of it. Would advise your seeing this before playing it. It's a tough baby for a small town. Played Feb. 24-25. Running time, 75 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

INFERNAL MACHINE: Chester Morris, Genevieve Tobin—Infernal is righto. It should have been sent to the inferno instead of released. Fox is so busy making "specials" it looks like they are sluffing any old thing off for regular releases. Maybe after Mr. Kent gets his house in order things will be different. Played Feb. 11.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

INFERNAL MACHINE: Chester Morris, Genevieve Tobin—This will probably rank as the weakest picture on the entire Fox program. Absolutely void of any picture entertainment. Push it on for one night and let it go at that. Just a waste of film. Played Feb. 21-22. Running time, 60 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

INFERNAL MACHINE: Chester Morris, Genevieve Tobin—A one-day program picture. Some action and some comedy. Not a screamingly funny picture as producers try to convey. Played Feb. 21-22.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Joan Bennett, Spencer Tracy—A very good show with some very good wisecracks which is suitable for this town. Usual Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday crowd. Played Feb. 21-22-23.—Mrs. Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglen—Poor draw. Fact is, seems mighty hard to get anything that is a good draw right now. A real novelty, funny picture. Has music, girls and hilarious football sequences, a lot of settings to marvel at but heaviest draw was among the young couples. Will please if you can get them in but we sure couldn't. Running time, 65 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

SHERLOCK HOLMES: Clive Brook—Good picture that drew a fair business. The English accent is a little hard to understand at times, but the picture has plenty of action and suspense. Played Feb. 15-16.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Family patronage.

SIX HOURS TO LIVE: Warner Baxter—Rather sad but drew well and pleased. Second day held up to average.—G. Cary, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Pretty fair picture. Hardly as good as other pictures of this pair, but still will get by. This team is a little over-rated in my opinion. Janet is a good girl, and Charles is a good boy, but what of it. They don't seem to get any extra dough, and I haven't seen any of the cash customers getting excited about them. Just a couple of good players, and draw just an average business, so are worth only an average price. Charles has had a haircut and it makes a just improvement in his looks. Janet still has the Scotch accent she acquired in "Delicious." "Tess" is okay, but not big. Played Feb. 17-18.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Family patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—A number of good comments and a fair crowd. Cold weather hurt our attendance but the picture deserves extra billing and a good spot. It really pleases and they don't hesitate to break the news.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Compares very favorable with the old Mary Pickford silent version. It is all that one could desire from this story. Some critics seem to think that this story is worn out hokum, but our patrons did not think so. There is a little monkey in this picture that deserves special mention. It adds a comedy touch that is highly enjoyable. You can play this any day of the week and get behind it in a big way. We had the best Sunday and Monday with this in a long time.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers, Marian Nixon—Rogers is well liked and he had good support in Marian Nixon, but I am of the opinion that they like Bill better in a comedy role than this one. He has a certain draw at the box office, but they are used to seeing him in a wisecracking role and this one is pathos with some comedy due to the dialogue. Incidentally this picture was made before as "Jubilo the First" that brought Bill to the screen.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—Drew well and pleased both days. We did not have to hide when they came out. Fathers and mothers brought their children. Mr. Rogers is doing his part to keep clean screens going. Played Feb. 22-23. Running time, 70 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

Majestic

CRUSADER: All star—A mighty good picture. Satisfied all that saw it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HEARTS OF HUMANITY: Jean Hersholt, Jackie Searle, Claudia Dell—Don't fail to play this one. Everybody liked it. Played Sunday to good business. —Paul J. Oresic, Grace Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis. Neighborhood patronage.

PHANTOM EXPRESS: Sally Blane, William Collier, Jr., J. Farrell Macdonald—A mighty good action picture. Story good and splendid cast of oldtimers. If one of the big companies had this one it would have been sold as a special.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

PHANTOM EXPRESS: William Collier, Jr., Sally Blane, J. Farrell Macdonald—One of the best railroad pictures produced. Played to splendid business on Sunday. Everyone well satisfied. Recording O.K.—Charles Washicheck, Pearl Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis. Neighborhood patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BLONDIE OF THE FOLLIES: Marion Davies, Robert Montgomery—We got a good letting alone on this one. We would have had just as many people out during a real blizzard as came to see this one. Fair picture but sure no draw. Running time, 90 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY: Jackie Cooper, Lois Wilson—Once more we drew heavy with the kids but not the adults. Picture should have appealed to adults too but we couldn't make them believe us so they stayed home or elsewhere. Jackie is his usual wonderful self with Lewis Stone as great as ever. Story was above the heads of most kids too. Running time, 82 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

FAITHLESS: Robert Montgomery—Raw. The guy that picks these stories must have always lived in Hollywood.—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Neb. General patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines—Has everything a picture should have. Entertainment and not so much action. Was a big relief.—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Neb. General patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines, Madge Evans—A very good action picture. Cliff Edwards is very good. In fact he almost steals the show. Pleased our small crowd. Haines just don't seem to draw here any more. Played Feb. 6-7.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

FLESH: Wallace Beery—Poor title. Poor story. Did not get them in. Pleased the men. Not for Sunday. Not the type part for Beery. Played Feb. 19-20. Running time, 75 minutes.—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Neb. General patronage.

FLESH: Wallace Beery, Karen Morley—Another Beery hit, as good as "The Champ." The ending somewhat spoils the show. Business only fair. Just can't get them in on a real good picture. They sure missed a treat here. Played Feb. 20-21.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: All star—Drew fair crowds but brings forth the usual complaint—not a small town picture. Played Feb. 14-15-16.—Mrs. Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

SON DAUGHTER: Ramon Novarro, Helen Hayes—A very, very rotten picture. Why they put a great actress like Helen Hayes and an actor like Novarro in such a bad story has got us all guessing. Pay for it and dump it. You will make money. Our worst business in months. Played Feb. 13-14.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

WHAT! NO BEER?: Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—A great disappointment to the patrons. Not much comedy. Not much business. Not much story. Durante "bellowed" from start to finish and nothing could stop him. Running time, 60 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

Monogram

LUCKY LARRIGAN: Rex Bell—A good western. This star is a comer.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

YOUNG BLOOD: Bob Steele—Not much of a western. His worst we have played. Played Feb. 18.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

Paramount

THE BIG BROADCAST: All star—Perfect entertainment for these days of depression or any other days. Highbrow critics may not include this among the year's ten best but from our honest to goodness entertainment standpoint this should head the list. The recording in this is almost perfect. Recording as fine as this should help to bring musicals back in a big way. Business on this good considering the Michigan bank holiday.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

THE BIG BROADCAST: Radio stars—This one will cure that sick box office. Paramount gave us a real show in this one. Audience delighted. Girls raved about Bing Crosby, saying wasn't he just deliciously luscious, how he could do this and how he could do that, but Stuart Erwin stole the picture. This is a fast coming boy and did you notice how much he resembles Will Rogers. Get on this picture. It gets the grapes. Everything and more than you expect.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

BILLION DOLLAR SCANDAL: Robert Armstrong—I considered this as good entertainment and will please the majority but will only draw fair business.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

EVENINGS FOR SALE: Herbert Marshall, Sari Maritza—Here's a peach of a show. Clean and clever. All four main characters are excellent. Special mention to Mary Boland. She is fine. Played Feb. 16-17. —D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HE LEARNED ABOUT WOMEN: Stuart Erwin —I could write, act, direct and photograph a better picture in my sleep. Running time, 65 minutes.—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Neb. General patronage.

HE LEARNED ABOUT WOMEN: Stuart Erwin: —Just fair and not as many laughs as they would have you to believe or promised. Ran as an owl show and they couldn't kick because we didn't charge them any extra. Played Feb. 25.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HELLO, EVERYBODY: Kate Smith—I hear this one died badly in the big spots. However while we did not clean up on it I'll say it satisfied all our patrons. Paramount, knowing Kate Smith's limitations, very cleverly built a story to suit her and it went over nicely with us. Played Feb. 12.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll—Good enough but can't be boosted. Ordinary program picture.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: Gary Cooper, Wynne Gibson—For some reasons this picture was not liked. Whether it was because it was a series of characters depicted with what they would do with a million dollars and not a connected story was the cause, I can't say but it flopped very badly. Then again they tore your heart out in the old woman's home sequence. It seems that they want happy pictures and while there was some small bits of comedy it did not help much. The picture is a finished production of its kind. All do fine work in their roles but it did not click and that is the proof of the pudding.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

IF I HAD A MILLION: All star—Here's something different and should be good entertainment for the majority. Personally liked it very much and would place it above average program. However, not a special. We have had some say it was great. Others did not care for it. You can't please all. Played Feb. 19-20.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

ISLAND OF LOST SOULS: Charles Laughton—In my opinion the poorest picture from Paramount this season. A hideous story in which beasts are made into humans. The makeup of the characters are terrible. How anyone can enjoy this is beyond me. No excuse for making a production of this kind. Played Feb. 10-11.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Family patronage.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN: Jack Oakie, Marion Nixon—From every angle a fine audience picture. You really see something. It strikes you deep if you have been around any or if you like sports. Story is grand and plenty of everything. Thanks, Paramount, for this good show.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft—A very good picture with plenty of good actors. Mae West is a knockout with Alison Skipworth doing very well. It built up on the second night and ain't that something.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

NO MAN OF HER OWN: Clark Gable—My first picture with Gable and to be frank I'm disappointed in him. A few of the ladies think he is "just wonderful," but I said a "few." The picture is fairly good, but did less than average business for me. The men folks did not care for it, but the ladies said "lovely."—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Family patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—A story of "Ye Olden Times" and a very interesting picture. Mae West is wonderful as a bad baby who gets her men. Cary Grant is very good also.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

TONIGHT IS OURS: Claudette Colbert, Fredric March—This combination of stars should draw extra business in any theatre. But under present conditions nothing seems to do it. A finely produced and well acted picture. Ladies especially will like it. Beautiful settings, music and clothes. Played Feb. 16-17. Running time, 65 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

THE WOMAN ACCUSED: Cary Grant, Nancy Carroll—Looks like ten more famous authors could not save this and as a draw it just wasn't. No kicks, but no raves. Just fair. Cast was good and direction good with what was offered to work with. The horsewhipping scene at the finish, while of 1910 vintage, was good. Played Feb. 19.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

RKO

COME ON DANGER: Tom Keene—Extra good western, well made and directed, good cast. Fair business for these times. Played Feb. 21-22.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

THE CONQUERORS: Ann Harding, Richard Dix —A few who never come were out for this one on the second night. Weather still very cold and snowy but the Sunday crowd was larger than the few preceding. Lots of favorable comments came in. Played Feb. 12-13.—Mrs. Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

GHOST VALLEY: Tom Keene—Usual draw and mystery mixed in with western story. Running time, 60 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

HELL'S HIGHWAY: Richard Dix—Fine entertainment for a prison story. Gave good satisfaction to those that like this kind of pictures. The star always good.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Wheeler & Woolsey—This picture is simply filled with real laughs. Fast comedy that gets over. A wow good for the blues. You can't go too strong on this. It is the big laugh show.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber Okla. General patronage.

THE LOST SQUADRON: Richard Dix, Ann Harding—An air story supreme. (Due to the good opinion previously stated in this section.) I went after this heavy. Every one was delighted. Played Feb. 2-3-4. —V. W. Fisk, Blue Water Theatre, Kincardine, Ont., Can. Small town patronage.

THE MOST DANGEROUS GAME: Joel McCrea, Leslie Banks—It would be impossible to make a more horrifying picture. Some liked it. Some did not, but if you want thrills this has 'em. Played Feb. 23-24.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

THE HALF-NAKED TRUTH: Lee Tracy—Fair.—R. W. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

THE SPORT PARADE: This one runs fifty-four minutes, and a lot of the shots look like newsreel shots. It's a fairly good little picture of sport events with a rather nice little love story. You can get it by on a week night or for double program. Played Feb. 24. Running time, 54 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

STRANGE JUSTICE: Marian Marsh, Reginald Denny—Just a program picture, suitable for your double program or low admission night. This one did not draw or please. RKO is giving us a lot of weak box office pictures this year. It would seem that they have lost the knack of turning out good pictures. Someone in New York or Hollywood had better get wise or it will be hard to sell RKO product next year. Played Feb. 17. Running time, 74 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

Tiffany

GET THAT GIRL: Richard Talmadge—A good cast wasted in a poor picture. Dick's stunts are good as ever but they are photographed in the dark, and the story doesn't hold together. Played Feb. 18-19.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HELL FIRE AUSTIN: Ken Maynard—Business a little off on this. Average western. Played Feb. 11-12.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MAN CALLED BACK: Conrad Nagel—Nice story. Sound good and excellent photography but did not draw. Played Jan. 30-31-Feb. 1.—V. W. Fisk, Blue Water Theatre, Kincardine, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

STRANGERS OF THE EVENING: Zasu Pitts, Eugene Pallett—A little on the gruesome side and not suitable for children. Didn't draw. Pitts shines to advantage in this picture. Had plenty of laughs. Played Feb. 16-17-18.—V. W. Fisk, Blue Water Theatre, Kincardine, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

TEXAS GUN FIGHTER: Ken Maynard—Good western and drew well. Played Jan. 5-6-7.—V. W. Fisk, Blue Water Theatre, Kincardine, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

United Artists

SCARFACE: Paul Muni, Ann Dvorak—A perfect picture in every respect. Pleased 100 per cent. Pretty strong stuff for the kiddies. My only criticism is that I paid about twice what it was worth to me. Played Feb. 25-26.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SKY DEVILS: Spencer Tracy, William Boyd—Excellent air story with plenty of comedy and stunt flying, no dull moments. Sound and photography excellent. Played Jan. 19-20-21.—V. W. Fisk, Blue Water Theatre, Kincardine, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

Universal

THE ALL AMERICAN: All star—This production is not entirely a football picture. It has all kinds of entertainment, and will please all classes of patrons. Good for any town any place. Played Feb. 25. —George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymount, Del. Small county patronage.

BACK STREET: John Boles, Irene Dunne—"Back Street" is a far cry from "Rio Rita" and "Cimarron," the pictures that made these two fine stars. How the mighty have fallen. Second day drew nothing which shows that bad living has no place on the screen or elsewhere. Played Feb. 20-21. Running time, 88 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

THE FOURTH HORSEMAN: Tom Mix—This old-timer always gets them in. Have shown every Mix picture since he first went in the flickers and expect to show him just as long as he can saddle a horse. This was a very pleasing well acted western.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

HIDDEN GOLD: Tom Mix—Not a bad western. Should do good any place. Tom is very good, he goes over very good with the kids. This picture should do good where they like westerns. It does not reach his last picture, but it should do business if it is sold as a gangster picture. Played Feb. 10-11. Running time, 54 minutes.—Wm. Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Small town patronage.

MY PAL THE KING: Tom Mix—Absolutely no draw at receipts. Kids, yes, lots of them, but no adults. And great picture for children. Believe westerns are sure slipping now that folks are picking their shows so carefully. Running time, 65 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

NAGANA: Tala Birell, Melvyn Douglas—This makes a good Saturday show for the small town. Plenty of action, wild animal fights galore and native dances. Trailer on this misleading. Love story not so hot. Good kid entertainment. Played Feb. 18.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THE OLD DARK HOUSE: Boris Karloff—Universal can not forget that they made "Frankenstein" and every picture they cast this star in is a little more of a horrible makeup than the last. They are getting fed up on this horror stuff. We played this as a blind program, not telling them what the picture was and we feel that we cheated them as not 50 per cent of the audience liked it. Now they have "The Mummy" and in prospect "The Invisible Man." Karloff is a good character actor and we have had him in support where the makeup was natural and he was liked, but Universal with a few more like "The Dark House" will kill him off for any potential draw that he might have.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

MAYBE IT WAS A MAIL HOLIDAY

We knew "Jaysee" shouldn't have done it. As soon as Jenkins labeled himself the "HERALD'S Vagabond Colyumnist" it was bound to happen. His latest literary lilt has gone vagabond too, somewhere in the mails. The Colyum will be with us again next week.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville—One of the best country pictures we ever played. Pleased them all and that is something nowadays. Played Feb. 21-22.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Warner Brothers

HARD TO HANDLE: James Cagney—I still think I could pick better stories than this. Good show though.—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Neb. General patronage.

I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG: Paul Muni—A real treat in pictures. Play this and you are sure to be pleased. We have to give it to Warner Bros. and First National for making good pictures, although the ending spoils this picture to a great extent. Played Feb. 8-9.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG: Paul Muni—Another good box office picture from Warner Brothers. It gave satisfaction and drew well above average business. Would advise playing this one and getting behind it with all you have. In fact, I would advise any exhibitor who has not bought Warner-First National this year to get busy and sign a contract, for they are making good box office pictures without spending a million doing it. Therefore, they can sell them to exhibitors where they can also make money with them. Played Feb. 17-18-19. Running time, 90 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG: Paul Muni—I was surprised that this picture did not do more business after the publicity it has received on the front pages of the papers. It's a great picture and tells a wonderful story. Give it your best days and play it up big. My personal opinion is that it would do 25 per cent more business if it had a happy ending. Exhibitors should be given a choice of having a happy or unhappy ending. I heard fifty people say how much better it would be if the story had been changed just a little. Everyone knows that Burns has been pardoned, and outside of Georgia, is a free man. The ending left a bad taste and lessened the value for one evening's entertainment. But in spite of this it's a great picture, so go after the business. Played Feb. 12-13-14.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Family patronage.

JEWEL ROBBERY: William Powell, Kay Francis —Here is highclass robbing brought down to date. I imagine film censors had a few puzzling moments deciding what to do about it seeing that the robber did not get his just desserts. But it is all done in a classy manner and not to be taken seriously and it made diverting amusement for most patrons. Business average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LADIES THEY TALK ABOUT: Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster—An excellent show with comedy and good music. Magazines unjustly criticized this show. Stanwyck and Foster great. Lillian Roth gives required personality (dimples and all). Patrons well pleased. Play this one. Played Feb. 20-21. Running time, 64 minutes.—Wm. Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Small town patronage.

LAWYER MAN: William Powell—Poor draw for business. Guess a bad title but excellent program picture. Pleased those we could entice to come see it. Running time, 68 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

RIDE 'EM COWBOY: John Wayne—Played this at our little western theatre and drew usual business. Sure pleased the lovers of this type movie. Running time, 58 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

STRANGER IN TOWN: Chic Sale, Ann Dvorak—Very good picture. Pleased everyone. Played Feb. 14-15.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

World Wide

BREACH OF PROMISE: Chester Morris, Mae Clarke—Picture very good, nice story, but somehow it did not appeal to the people in this town but should do good any place where they like such a type of a picture. This is a hard town to please. Good sound in this picture. World Wide is coming up in the world with their pictures. If they keep it up they will be on top. Played Feb. 15-16. Running time, 60 minutes.—Wm. Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Small town patronage.

HYPNOTIZED: Moran and Mack—Not so hot. They came to see Moran and Mack and to hear some Two Black Crows stuff but it isn't here. Not much for drawing power and they sell it as a special. I'm going to ask for my money back. Played Feb. 20-21.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

TEXAS BUSSIES: Bob Steele—Better than other Steeles and a good western. There is more than just ordinary western fare worked in and the horse race seemed to give the chewers and spitters a thrill. An old Ford and two old timers injected considerable comedy. Played Feb. 24-25. Running time, 57 minutes. —Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

WHISTLIN' DAN: Ken Maynard—Will please the western fans and that's about all you can say for these boys. Now and then along comes a really good western but the majority are just fair. They don't make you any enemies and always draw a good crowd.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Universal

Warner Vitaphone

BOSKO'S BRAWBACK: Looneytune—Another good cartoon with burlesque football as theme. Running time, 6 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

Serials

Universal

AIR MAIL MYSTERY: James Flavin, Lucille Browne—Very poor serial. Repeats too much of former chapter.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala.

HEROES OF THE WEST: Noah Beery, Jr.—Twelve chapters. Universal knows how to make good serials. All you have to do, to realize this, is run a few serials that are made by other companies. We have only shown the first chapter of this one and it got off to a great start and looks like an extra good serial for Saturday shows. Running time, 20 minutes each chapter.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

TECHNOLOGICAL

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 163:—(A) Name some of the troubles encountered which may be charged directly to poorly made film splices. (B) Why is it of especial importance that all emulsion be scraped away from around the sprocket holes when making splices? (C) Just how much cement should be used when making a splice? (D) Too little cement won't do, of course. Is the use of too much cement objectionable? If so, why?

Answer to Question No. 156

Bluebook School Question No. 156 was: "(A) Dale Danielson asks why flicker is more noticeable from a 25-cycle arc than from two-wing shutter interruptions when running at normal projection speed? (B) Tell us just what a watt represents and why it represents it. (C) In connection with Section A of this question, tell us just why rapidity of light interruptions have an effect upon flicker.

The list of correct answers is very short this week. Very few were able even to make a good try on Sections A and C. Among those who made the grade I have included Danielson, though he did not try to answer his own question he made good on the others and naturally could not be expected to answer his own. P. W. Edwards, T. L. Mannerly and D. T. Rizley sent excellent answers to Question 155 too late for consideration. Those answering No. 156 correctly are G. E. Doe, S. Evans and C. Rau, Lester Borst, J. Wentworth, P. W. Edwards, T. Van Vaulkenburg, Dale Danielson, C. Biggers, J. Lane, H. D. Schofield, H. B. Coates, and H. D. Cylor, H. D. Davis and W. Sullivan (answering as a unit), A. Burt and M. L. Mastbaum, O. Garling and B. Diglah, and D. R. Peters. This is the shortest list in two years. But they were pretty tough questions.

We will listen to Cylor, Davis and Sullivan on Section A. They say, "This is something which puzzled us as well as Brother Danielson for a long while. We think we now have the correct solution, chiefly because there seems to be no other reasonable one. Certain it is that while the difference between true 25-cycle alternation low points, and shutter blade light interruptions, as per the question, is only as 48 and 50 per second. Still we believe there may be a decided difference in effect for the reason that whereas the shutter blades open and close the lens very quickly, the alternations each start at zero voltage, rising gradually, though of course very rapidly, up to maximum, where it remains only for the smallest imaginable space of time (possibly one-millionth of a second), again sinking gradually to zero in e. m. f.

"Studying these effects it would seem that while we must agree that the action of the alternation low points and the shutter blade interruptions are approximately equal in time spacing, the effect upon the eye might and probably would be quite different, the arc low points being less dark but of longer total duration, hence more visible."

I have studied this matter many times during past years and listened patiently to many arguments thereon, arriving finally at the conclusion that this must be the correct explanation of the matter. G. E. Doe, K. Dowling and T. Van Vaulkenburg all expressed the same view, as follows:

"Shutter blades complete the cut-off and readmit the light much more quickly and completely than do the alternations of an arc. The difference, it is believed (not measured in time between cut-offs, but in the effect of the cut-offs themselves) causes the alternations to be visible when the shutter cut-offs are either less so or wholly obliterated."

(B) It was hard to select the answer to be published but I believe that of G. E. Doe will perhaps serve best. He says, "The watt is the unit of electrical energy. It represents the amount of work one ampere will accomplish working under one volt of pressure. It is calculated by multiplying the number of amperes flowing by the voltage impressed at the point where the work is done. It represents electrical energy for the reason that it is the product of the two working elements, viz., amperes and volts."

(C) J. Wentworth, P. W. Edwards and D. R. Peters express the same thought in almost the same form of words, as follows: "For the reason that the human eye will only transmit to the brain a certain definite number of impressions of light changes per second, the number varying rather widely in accordance with the amount of change in brilliancy. Above the number of variations visible at any given brilliancy value the light spaces merge into one another, so that they constitute, for all practical purposes, constant visibility, the darker spaces being wholly obliterated. It then follows that for constancy of visible light, where light variations or interruptions occur, the variations must occur at a speed in excess of the power of the eye to perceive them."

Again may I warn you, gentlemen? Place your name and the number of the question being answered at the top of the first page. This saves a lot of time and trouble where so very many answers are being handled. I must therefore insist upon it. The work is very trying at best and you should be willing to make it as easy as possible. I shall in future disregard any answer not marked as above indicated.

Uniform Projector Aperture Results

A theatre survey has been completed by the Academy's Technical Bureau to ascertain how generally the change to the uniform projector aperture, made last year, has been effected throughout the country and whether the new practice has resulted in more accurate framing and in economies from the simplification of aperture equipment.

Dirt on Aperture Plate: Majority of studios reported they had been troubled by dirt on upper and lower edges of new aperture plates, but nearly all stated that a slight chamfering of these edges had eliminated the trouble. The following additional steps were taken by some studios: (a) Adjusting a .007" clearance between aperture plate and pressure plate. (b) Use of non-magnetic metal aperture insert. (c) Frequent renewal of plating as soon as wear becomes apparent.

Reflection from Sled Runner: Replies indicated that what trouble had been present due to reflection of light kicking back from sled runner of Mitchell camera movement had been eliminated by painting bevelled edge of aperture plate, or by a .002" curvature of sled runner on sound track side of movement. One studio found it necessary to paint the inside face of the aperture plate, into which the pressure plate rollers have their bearing.

Difficulty in Reversing Scenes: Difficulty with reversing scenes was cited. With silent picture, or with old full frame aperture it was customary to reverse scenes when necessary (for instance, to show a train entering from the left which was photographed as entering from the right) by turning the nagative over in printing. The matting off of the sound track area in the new aperture made it necessary to use optical printing in order to reverse scenes. This was taken into account by the committee when the aperture dimensions were set, but it was considered that the advantages of matting off the sound track in the camera instead of in the printer outweighed the disadvantages of optical printing for the comparatively infrequent reversal of scene. The replies to the survey further supported this position.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

PROVE YOUR METTLE—OR QUIT!

ANYONE CAN ACT like a "big shot" when times are flush and the good, old dough-re-mi is rolling into the box office . . . but . . . let the good times slip around that corner and you find yourself face to face with brutal . . . cold . . . hard conditions. . . . Then you'll soon find out whether your insides are made up of guts or just plain sawdust. . . .

Although it is only three days since the bank holiday hit New York, we have already formed some pleasant and unpleasant opinions about managers whose reaction to this latest crisis showed them up in their proper light. . . . Those who have the ability and stamina to face times like these are still smiling. . . . Still battling along the front-line trenches for that elusive dollar. . . . Still plugging along and spreading a note of cheer and optimism that should make the other eggs look like mud. . . .

If you ever concealed a streak of yellow under that stereotyped grin, it will come to the surface now . . . and if you can't take it, you'll soon let that fact also become well known to yourself and those around you. . . .

Out of this mess of finances . . . scrip . . . worthless checks and terrible business conditions there will emerge the leaders of tomorrow. . . . No, we're not going into a song and dance. . . . We're merely putting our thoughts into cold type so that he who runs can read . . . and . . . keep on running . . . while those who stay to face the music and the firing squad bid the "overnight" showmen "good riddance." . . . And go right on running their theatres as they should be run. . . We need good men . . . men with the ability and will to accomplish real things in the face of overwhelming odds and men who can hurdle what we once thought were insurmountable obstacles . . . and land on both feet. . . . So, brothers . . . if you can't take it . . . scram. . . .

LAY OFF SUPERLATIVES!

AND now, on the subject of institutional advertising, it might not be amiss to ask you to give this angle much, much more thought that you have been in the past. Using a little of your budget to talk about your theatre might prove a welcome relief to every theatregoer in your town after the endless stream of adjectives and superlatives about this "great" and that "greater" picture.

As one patron remarked, sitting behind me at an uptown movie the other night during the screening of a trailre, "My God, every picture made is the greatest, according to these trailers." To which we muttered an "amen."

Surely there are some features of your theatre worthy of talking about besides the picture itself. One of the most impressive plays for patronage waged on the West Coast Circuit during H. B. Franklin's regime, was in connection with selling the theatre and its manifold comforts and service and NOT the picture show.

IDLE CHATTER!

CAN you picture an exhibitor registering a complaint with an exchange because they failed to send out a checker for a percentage picture? . . . and it was on a holiday too? ? ? ? They ought to take that exhib to a doctor and have his head examined . . . Not that an exhib would cheat the exchange on a percentage picture . . . Hell no . . . (not much) . . .

It may surprise a whole lot of people to learn that the best paying and most congenial circuit outfit to work for in the Metropolitan area is the Randforce Company . . . operated by Sam Rinzler and Louis Frisch . . . and are we tickled to further announce that they are getting their money's worth . . . and more . . . out of everyone of those decently-paid managers . . . (Other circuits please note) . . .

As mentioned last week . . . "NOW," the R. K. O. house organ, makes its reappearance after a brief lapse . . . and we greet it with open arms. . . . "NOW" may be dubbed a bit "Ritzy" . . . but it gets its message over while avoiding the pitfalls of cold . . . hard . . . type.

Here we are back again in the throes of Lent . . . once a terrible bugaboo . . . but now losing its hold because showmen are getting hep to ways and means of keeping up box office pep notwithstanding the brief absence of those who observe their Lent quite religiously. . . . Our own special contributor . . . Ira Glucksman . . . gave you enough ammunition to fight off three Lent attacks in the issue of Feb. 18th. . . . Just in case you failed to take time out to read it through we're suggesting that you pull down that issue and get busy . . . there still remains time to wade through the "Fearful Forty Days" and come out smiling. . . .

ANTIQUE CAR USED BY LEW HARRIS TO BALLYHOO PICTURES

In addition to managing the Fox-Egyptian Theatre out in Delta, Colo., Lew Harris does a bit of occasional ballyhooing in a "Model T" he keeps expressly for this purpose.

Either it was a dark day or else Lew's camera was a little out of focus, for a snapshot he sent along showing the car pressed into service on "Phantom President" is not quite sharp enough to give his fellow Club members a slant on how he looks in the driver's seat. The body and hood of car were painted with theatre copy in the well known collegiate style.

Lew is another man who believes an old Ford makes an effective bally and he's also one of those managers who doesn't mind jumping into the ballyhoo man's place when an emergency arises. We're sorry his photo won't reproduce well enough to present evidence of his act and will look for better results next time. In the meantime, continued success to Harris.

RINZLER CONSTRUCTED ATTRACTIVE DISPLAY AT VERY SMALL COST

Construction of attractive yet economical displays by many managers on the Randforce Circuit, Brooklyn, N. Y., is again evidenced in one recently made for "They Call It Sin" by J. Rinzler, manager of the Marcy Theatre.

It was fashioned in step effect, each step carrying the cutout names of principal players in the cast. Between the first and last names appeared star-heads of the players and each step was illuminated from flasher lights in the interior. The display was topped off with a sign carrying title and playdates. The last step carried the title of the added feature, a western picture. The entire display set Rinzler back only $1.25.

We have a photo of the display described above, but it's altogether too dark for good reproduction. Interested Club members, we believe, will get the idea from the description and here's thanks to Rinzler for his contribution. Next time maybe he will have better luck with his camera.

SELLING "42ND STREET"

No showman need go hunting for ideas when preparing to sell Warner Bros.' "42nd Street." The only physical effort on your part should be to secure their unusual press book on this attraction. From that point you have only to select those suggestions contained in that book to make your theatre's engagement of "42nd Street" a box office winner.

All too rarely do we find the opportunity of waxing enthusiastic over a press sheet, but here is one that leaves little or nothing to the imagination. Page after page is crammed full of carefully thought-out ideas to bring business to the box office; newspaper ad suggestions that are bound to make your ad campaign really reflect the box office strength of the picture itself. Any one of them can be adapted to suit practically every type of theatre. And there is a noticeable lack of silly gags.

We congratulate those responsible for this fine piece of work and so will every showman who uses it all through his planning for a campaign that MUST bring dollars to the box office. Pick up a copy the next time you visit your local W. B. exchange or write for it well in advance of your play dates, for we know you will find everything you can hope for in the way of sensible merchandising for a picture worthy of the best efforts you ever gave to any campaign. MERCHANTS AND LODGE HELPED GENTES WHEN STAGING XMAS PARTY

Theatre, merchants and a fraternal organization tied up to give the more unfortunate youngsters of Woonsocket, R. I., where E. E. Gentes manages the Laurier Theatre, a Xmas party that the kiddies are still talking about.

Gentes had 1,200 tickets printed and distribution was taken care of by the fraternal order, at which place the kiddies met to form for a parade to the theatre. An escort of motor cycle police headed the line of march to the theatre and as each youngster entered the house he or she was greeted by Santa Claus and given a bag of candy. During the special performance over 200 toys, donated by the merchants, were awarded in the usual give-away fashion. At the close of the performance the management made a brief Xmas good cheer speech and sent the kids home with smiles on their faces.

That was a nice gesture Gentes made to youngsters who seldom have an opportunity to witness a motion picture show and he will undoubtedly be repaid many times over when conditions right themselves. The families in poor circumstances today are not always going to be that way and they'll surely recall this good deed when pay envelopes again make appearance.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Floyd W. Davis, manager of the Fox-Rex Theatre, Clay Center, Kas., began his career in showbusiness fifteen years ago as an usher and worked his way up the ladder to the post of assistant city manager of the Fox-Dodge, Crown, Cozy and Beeson Theatres, Dodge City, Kas. In addition to ushering, he held down the jobs of doorman and projectionist before entering the managerial end of the game. He has worked for Midwest Theatres, Inc., and later on with Fox, when the Midwest firm was taken over by Midwesco.

Floyd W. Davis

Davis was born in McPherson, Kansas, and was educated in the public and high schools of his home town. He is married, the father of three children and a member of the Rotary Club and the American Legion. During the late war he saw service as an instructor. Apparently he entered the theatre business at the close of the war and we have his word for it that he's in it for keeps.

A few photos enclosed with his biography data show that he is adept in the art of making portable lobby displays. One we have on hand is of a re-vamped insert frame, which can be placed most anywhere. He generally used two of these in corners of the stair landing. Another, of one-sheet size, can also be placed anywhere. Flitter and hand-lettering make the pieces unusually attractive. We also note from still another photo that Floyd dug up one of those life-sized horse models, which used to be so conspicuous in the pre-auto days, to use as a lobby display for "County Fair." We'll tell you more about his work in future issues.

CARL SHERRED NOW AT STRAND THEATRE IN CUMBERLAND, MD.

It's mighty gratifying to again get a line on Carl B. Sherred, whose contributions in the past have been of invaluable aid to this department. He is managing the Strand Theatre down in Cumberland, Md., a house taken over by Paramount Publix last November, and now that he is located in a good spot we'll hope to receive a lot more show-selling data from this Club member.

We have a photo at hand showing a fine cut-out frame novelty made on "Mummy," but owing to lack of bright light in the lobby when the shot was taken it will not reproduce to advantage. However, it's easy to see that the display set off the Strand's handsome lobby and the fellows who made it are certainly due words of praise. Sherred and his crew gave this one the works as far as exploitation was concerned and their efforts yielded outstanding returns for a three-day engagement.

Sherred has with him Reginald E. West, formerly with Charles Carroll at the Academy of Music, New York City, and Frank Florentine, one of the best poster artists in showbusiness. We'll be right on their heels until they shoot along some samples.

Seems as though several of our best members are heading down into Maryland and Delaware. First it was Sherred and now Rosenthal who migrates from upper New York State. Oh, well; seems as though they get all the good breaks anyhow—north in the summer and south in the winter.

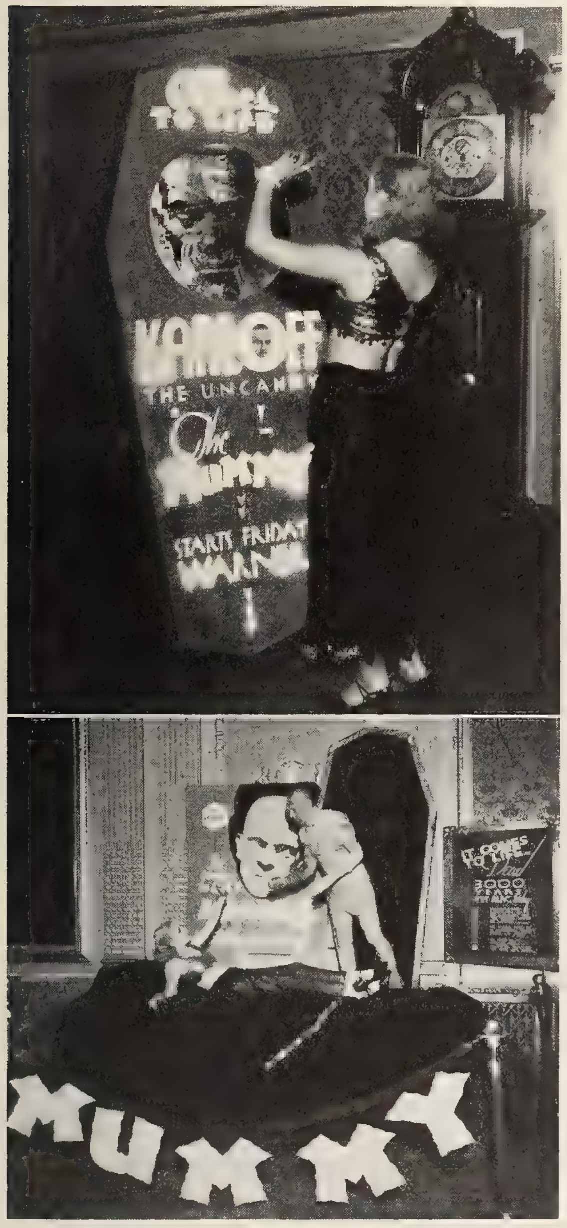
SPENCER DOING WELL WITH HIS AD BUDGET, DESPITE SMALL SPACE

It's about time we heard again from C. T. Spencer, who skippers the Tivoli Theatre up in Hamilton, Toronto, Canada. The last time we were in touch with him he complimented this department on the series of advertising articles contributed by Ken Long, stating that he found them of considerable help even in view of the fact that he had been writing copy and making layouts for a long, long time. A few samples of newspaper ads he enclosed shows that despite economical measures as to space, he is accomplishing excellent results with exchange mats, white space and a few rules.

What are you doing to combat the Lenten slump in trade, Spence? Next time the Club Spirit moves you to get in touch with headquarters let us know so we can pass the word along the line.

"MUMMY" STUNTS



The photo above depicts two stunts used on "Mummy" by Roy Rowe, manager of the Warner Theatre, Pittsburgh. The top portion shows a mirror which changes the gazer's face to a mummy. Take two pieces of plate glass with gold leaf to make a mirror, four lights inside the case to overcome the mirror effect, and a head of Karloff as the mummy in the background. When lights are off you see yourself; when they are turned on your reflection disappears and you see the head of the mummy.

The lower portion shows the mummy and girl ballyhoo dramatizing "The Mummy—It Comes to Life."

EXCHANGE MATS AND ADVERTISING!

In the second of the new series illustrated on the opposite page, Eddie Hitchcock continues the idea of stressing the use of outstanding portions of regulation exchange mats in building up fine looking newspaper ads. It will be noticed that where the exchange can furnish an unusually attractive mat, you merely chop out enough of the unnecessary portions of the mat to leave room for your added subjects, play dates, etc.

We emphasize this point because many showmen are apt to get the idea that ALL mats should be broken up regardless of their value. Do not misconstrue the purpose of these ad suggestions. They are to help you make better advertising and not to try and tell you to revamp your entire system. A combination of thought in this direction is quite apt to solve your advertising problem and place it on the same plane with other theatres.

HIEHLE HAS TIE-UP WITH A RESTAURANT THAT'S GOING OVER

In case any Club member feels the pangs of hunger while in the vicinity of Newark, Ohio, home of Ed Hiehle, manager of the Midland Theatre, we feel reasonably safe in recommending that they visit the Sparta restaurant (not an advt.) and pack away a choice of a half-fried chicken, boneless sirloin and a lot of other knick-knacks, all for the sum of 60 cents; providing, of course, there's that much money around.

And that's not all by any means. Included in the 60-cent charge is a ticket to see Ed's show, which he let's the restaurant proprietor have for half-price in return for menu card advertising; special art window card; decorated sign inside the grill, where people can see it whether buying or not; and generous mention of theatre in all newspaper advertising. In fact, as Hiehle points out, the name of Midland catches a customer's eye at all corners, even though they may only turn out to be soda drinkers. The place gets a big play, so you can judge for yourselves the effectiveness of the tie-up.

It is still necessary for theatres and other institutions out in Newark to help alleviate the unemployment situation and provide for needy citizens, so Ed recently held another Food Matinee Benefit and turned over to the local relief committee 1,262 cans of food, to say nothing of 50 bushels of potatoes and 15 bushels of assorted carrots, beans, onions, turnips and other food items. Figuring on the basis of feeding 400 people daily, the assortment will keep the food kitchen going for a month.

It's always interesting to hear from Hiehle and to find out what he's doing for showbusiness out in Newark, which in nine times out of ten is a stunt that's boosting his trade or establishing additional good will. More about his activities at a later date.

ARE HALF OF THESE CAMPAIGN IDEAS EVER CARRIED OUT

—and we would like to know the same thing. Some guys spend more time thinking up ideas than they spend trying to put them over successfully. Fewer, but better, campaigns should be the keynote these days.

JACK LYKES WAGED GOOD CAMPAIGN TO SELL "FU MANCHU"

Due to the effective campaign he waged in behalf of "Fu Manchu," J. E. Lykes, manager of Loew's Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, returns were very gratifying during the engagement of that picture. Following is a brief resume of his work:

The campaign included use of a teaser trailer four weeks in advance, placement of a 10 ft. cutout with papier mache head inside lobby three weeks in advance; daily (gratis) radio announcements advance and current; 50 window displays through tie-ups with Italian Balm Co., which furnished cards with "Fu Manchu" copy to dealers; special lobby display advance and current, using Chinese lanterns, large incense burner, glass wind chimes, etc.; tie-up with restaurant to feature "Fu Manchu" specials. Chinese orchestral number and announcements on picture and theatre; attractive lobby display of imported Chinese tea boxes; special window displays in Oriental stores, with signs playing up picture and theatre and a ballyhoo consisting of masked men in Chinese costume, who struck Chinese cymbal in front of theatre and effectively aided the sale of tickets with his act.

So take your choice of Round Tabler Lykes' "Fu Manchu" stunts, providing you haven't already played the picture, and join with us in thanking him for sending along the information. We understand he also put over a most successful campaign on "Island of Lost Souls" and we'll present the facts on this one just as soon as the material arrives. Okay on Oscar Doob's Manual, Jack; he certainly deserves a lot of credit for doing a fine job. Also, we're sorry we missed seeing you on our recent trip out Ohio way. Better luck next time. In the meantime, keep up the excellent work.

Ranger Club Tie-up

Buck Jones Rangers Clubs in Brooklyn, N. Y., have tied-in with the opening of a trading post and social centre sponsored by Abraham & Straus, a leading department store. The opening calls for a parade of Rangers from the Savoy Theatre, headed by National Chairman Harold Emerson and several cowboys.

Monty Salmon

If you have wondered about his absence from our Club pages after running up a record for activity in merchandising and theatre operation, then we would have you know that he is so busy supervising a large group of theatres for Skouras-Publix that he could do no more than just drop us a line occasionally to let us know that he is still a Club booster. And well do we know that he is telling the truth, as witness the many new members he has recruited from the managers in his division plus their fine show-selling ideas which are sent in regularly.

As Division Manager for the Atlantic States Division, Salmon has won the respect and admiration of every man in the division. Treats them all as he himself would want to be treated and never hands out the high-hat. A qualification that all divisional managers should acquire at the earliest possible moment because it is the quickest way to profits and success.

We are keenly interested in the way Monty is handling this large group of houses and hope to cover the territory with him this spring. If we do, we know that what we observe at first hand will make good copy for the Club pages.

OLIVER TURNS OUT STRIKING DISPLAYS AND RESELLS THEM

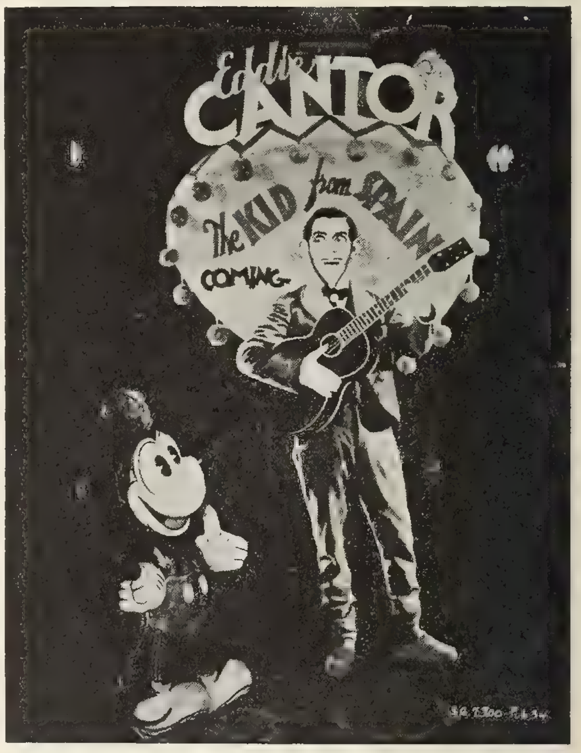
Charles J. Oliver, operator of the Sharum Theatre, Walnut Ridge, Ark., not only turns out attractive displays but reduces this end of his overhead by selling them to other theatres in his section of the state.

A small snap-shot at hand, too faint for good reproduction, shows a display he recently used on "Grand Hotel." Of sunburst type and made out of beaverboard, the word Grand was cut out of the background and covered with silver flitter. The word Hotel was also cut out, then tacked to the background and covered with red tinsel, with letter "T" made into a frame for a still. Five other stills were cut out and also covered with tinsel, as well as the lettering and stars in the two side panels.

We're sorry that Oliver's snap-shot couldn't be clearly reproduced and hope that this fact will not deter him in the matter of sending along other material in the future. Thanks to him for his contribution and we'll be awaiting his next communication. That's a smart gag of his about selling his used displays to other exhibitors and it may give some of his brother showmen similar ideas.

MOVING DISPLAY OF CANTOR AND MICKEY MADE BY HARRY SHAW

The accompanying photo shows the two mechanical cutouts designed for Eddie Cantor and Mickey Mouse by Harry Shaw, manager of Loew's State Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y. Both of the figures are electrically operated.



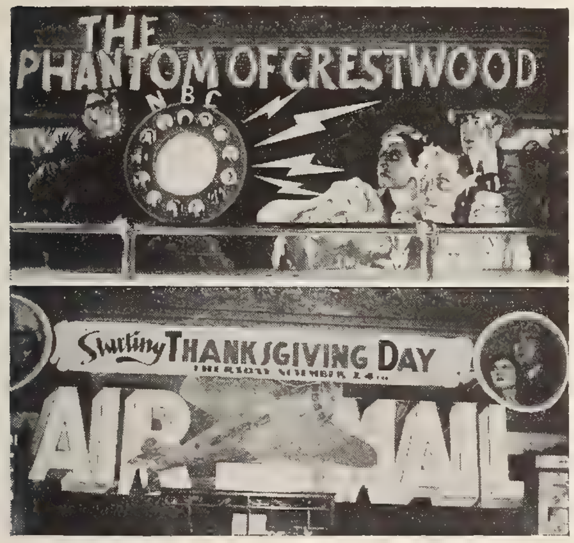
The Cantor cutout, which was made for "Kid From Spain," was arranged so the eyes moved back and forth and the right hand strummed a guitar. Mickey's eyes also moved from side to side and his left hand worked up and down, as in a salute. During the "Kid From Spain" engagement Shaw installed a phonograph behind the figures to play song hits from the film and timed the apparatus so that Eddie's hand and Mickey's eyes and hand appeared to keep beat with the music. This display was unusually attractive and aroused considerable comment.

MORE NOTES ON WHAT CONNER IS DOING TO STEP-UP BOX OFFICE

It is always intresting to report the activities of M. Conner, manager of the Tower Theatre, B & K house in Chicago, and a consistent contributor to the Round Table Club.

When he played "All American," Joe Kirby, Conner's assistant, worked up a corking publicity stunt as the result of being able to contact many of the fellows who appeared in the film. Kirby, a recent graduate of Notre Dame, had little difficulty in obtaining letters and autographed photos from the players and these, together with reviews of the picture, were made into a 40x60 blow-up and mounted on an easel. Real footballs and a large cutout of a football player in action gave the display additional atmosphere. The crowd which constantly hung around the display for two weeks offers evidence of its worth.

A week prior to the showing of "Chandu" the ticket taker played an important part in putting over a particularly effective stunt. The young fellow was dolled up in a Chandu outfit, turban and all, and a dagger was to all appearances run through his wrist. With that hand he collected the tickets and made a big play on the dagger, which resulted in a lot of curiosity on the part of practically everyone who entered the doors. When the crowd became too large another of the staff stepped up to help out until the regular ticket taker completed his demonstration. It was the old trick of a knife split in two and cleverly held by spring wire and the ticket boy secured his plug on the picture by stating: "Chandu Thanks You," when passing in the patrons. Currently the ticket taker was used at the front, near the box office and always drew a crowd.



Hyde Park School, which is not far away from the Tower Theatre, recently gave its student photographers several dozen films to practice making pictures for their forthcoming "Annual." Conner asked for the finished prints and had them mounted on an easel made into the form of an open book representing the Annual. Circles were drawn around the figures in the groups and each week those students received passes for the following week. Parents of the students, other relatives and their friends were as interested in the stunt as the students and along with the free publicity given the theatre in the weekly school paper it worked out to considerable advantage.

One portion of the accompanying photo shows a display fashioned for "Phantom of Crestwood." The letters were cut out in the theatre work-shop and painted yellow and green, with black velour for a drop. The figures and phantom head were cut from a 24-sheet and the circle was made to represent a large microphone, around which were mounted the heads of the 13 people involved in the murder. It was necessary to highlight the phantom head to make it stand out as though it were painted with luminous paint.

On "Air Mail" a 24-sheet cutout was also used in connection with a model plane display built by boys in the Park Playground classes and a collection of all kinds of air mail. The boys spent their evenings in the lobby of the theatre and attracted much attention with their art of flying the models, many of them holding records for this particular brand of pastime. The lower portion of the photo shows the display made for this picture.

For "Tiger Shark" a very effective atmosphereic lobby was attained by placing posters against a background of fish-netting and rope, both of which were borrowed. While a couple of original snap-shots at hand convey a pretty good idea of this display, both are too faint for clear reproduction.

Once again we are indebted to Conner for sending in a variety of show-selling tips to his Club and we're passing them along pronto to his fellow Round Tablers. He and his staff at the Tower are a live aggregation and we can always depend upon them for some good tips on trade boosting activities. We'll be on the watch for more.

"KING KONG," DESIGNED FOR DOUGH!

There can be little doubt but that "King Kong" will roll up tremendous box office grosses all over the country. Those who recall "Lost World" and its box office appeal will understand why we enthuse over the possibilities of this one when we say that it is even greater and more breathtaking than "Lost World."

The selling angles are so wide and varied that none need spend a sleepless moment doping out merchandising or gag slants. Just to know what the picture is all about is to think up the selling gags as fast as your mind will function.

Don't treat "King Kong" as "just another picture." If you do you will ruin the chances of reaping a harvest of dollars that will surely result from any sort of an effort to sell this as a tremendously different picture. It has selling slants galore; possesses that rare ingredient called "magnetism" for pulling customers to the box office and will undoubtedly do just that if you sell it properly.

Here is an exploitation picture of even greater possibilities than "Bring 'Em Back Alive," and you know what exploitation did for that baby. Go out after it for exactly what it is: A Big Picture Made for Big Business.

"CHICK"

PARVIN TURNED OUT FINE DISPLAY FOR S. FARRAR'S TIE-UP

It's too bad we cannot reproduce a photo of the fine display Tom Parvin, poster artist and display man, turned out for Steve M. Farrar, managing director of the Colonial Amusement Company, in behalf of the Grand and Orpheum Theatres in Harrisburg, Ill., for it certainly must have been a striking piece of work; however, the print is much too dark to do any sort of justice to his efforts and we'll have to resort to a description.

It seems that "Whit's Cafe," a spacious restaurant with a long sidewall, is one of the most popular spots in town, as testified to by a matter of 500 to 1,000 cash-register rings per day. For the mere offer of one pass each week for the proprietor and his wife and a screen slide run at each show, Farrar induced the restaurant keeper to decorate the entire side wall with two displays made out of beaver board, flittered with diamond dust. One of the displays plugged the Orpheum and the other the Grand. The entire cash outlay amounted to only $10 and permits a change of posters every week.

Next time Steve Farrar sends along a photo of Tom Parvin's art work we hope it will be sharp enough to reproduce for the benefit of their fellow Club members. We have a hunch that Parvin has real talent in his line and we'd like to show the rest of the gang what a good job he is capable of turning out.

A BOX-OFFICE AD!

Take Our Word for It-

WE HAVE NEVER OFFERED MORE REAL ENTERTAINMENT IN ONE MOTION PICTURE!

For the first time since we have assumed the management of the GRAND THEATER, have we felt privileged to make such a statement as the above. We have just seen what we are convinced is a GREAT picture, and we have weighed its merits against those of the other great pictures we have shown in the past.

This is our verdict—

"20,000 YEARS IN SING SING"

is the greatest SINGLE entertainment the GRAND Theatre has ever offered!

Not fiction but fact! Not a "prison story," but—the first and only picture ever written by a prison warden!—astounding inside revelations by world-famous Warden Lawes of Sing Sing—forming a blazing background for the heart-gripping story of one man and one girl—a girl who didn't seem to have the courage to wait for the love the Law had taken from her

Take our word for it—"the greatest single entertainment the Grand Theatre has ever offered!"

STARTING THURSDAY NETH'S GRAND

This time it is the text we are calling attention to. You will find it convincing and possessed of real pulling powers for the box office; that little hole-in-the-glass where the results proclaim to your statement just how good—or how bad—your ideas are. This ad ought to rate the "good" classification. What say YOU?

A Fable in Slang

by GAREY CARR, Ontario, California

Once upon a time, in the days B.D., there was great prosperity throughout the Land and large crowds wandered hither and yon among the amusement emporiums seeking the magic words "All Talking."

High and Mighty men ruled the Home Office and Big Shots arose among the Keepers of the Show Places.

As was the custom in those days great feasts were spread every second fortnight and the Clan gathered and listened to words of wisdom fall from the lips of the Chief and ever and anon one of the Big Shots would arise and recite glowing accounts of great exploitation stunts he had concocted which had brought the highlanders in droves, forming long and endless lines at the Box Office.

And the Meek and Lowly of the Keepers listened in awe to these mighty feats of their Big Brothers and marveled at their great expense accounts.

Came the Depression and great upheaval among the Clan. High and Mighty personages disappeared from the Home Office and in their places came Two Brothers seeking profit and understanding from the Keepers. And behold a Miracle happened. The Big Shots failed to impress the Two Brothers with their tales of great adventure and were told to go to work.

And there was wailing and gnashing of teeth for the Big Shots had forgotten how to work and had hidden so long in the seclusion of their luxurious offices that they knew not the Common Herd who had been leaving their quarters and their half dollars at the Box Office and now these Good People who had brought in their nightly toll had disappeared and the Big Shots knew not where to find them.

But among the more lowly of the Keepers were many who had spent long hours mingling with the people in the lobby of their amusement places and had grown to know many by their first names and had made countless lasting friendships and had discussed their mutual problems One to the Other and their friendships were strengthened and the grosses continued and the Keepers remained in their positions even after many of the High and Mighty and the Big Shots had disappeared from the accustomed Meeting Places.

The Moral of this fable is: Good managers are scarce but a Supervisor is born every minute.

Porter Making Good

Carl Porter, recently named general manager of Warner theatres in Salem, Ore., is making exploitation headlines out his way. When campaigning a western film a short time ago he dug up a trained buffalo and hitched the animal to a cart to ballyhoo the coming picture. The novelty attracted plenty of attention. Porter not only uses regular newspaper space and trailers on forthcoming attractions, but has installed a number of special and striking fronts on both the Elsinore and Capitol, helping to hold the income of these houses up to and slightly above normal.

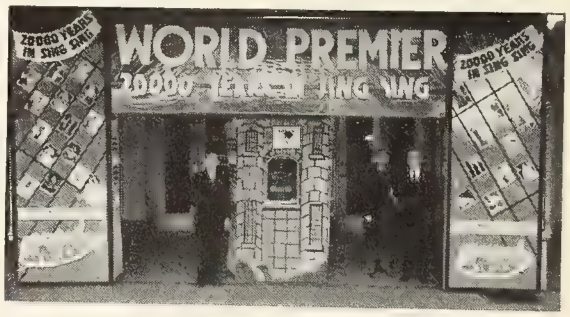
Gag for the Ladies!

The RKO Palace Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, and a local newspaper have been giving all adolescent females an opportunity to prove that their features resemble certain movie stars. Girls are invited to submit photos with a memo as to what actress they are supposed to resemble and participate in the chances of winning a suitable award or obtaining short terms of employment offered by local department stores. The Palace plans a special Hollywood style celebration when the awards are made.

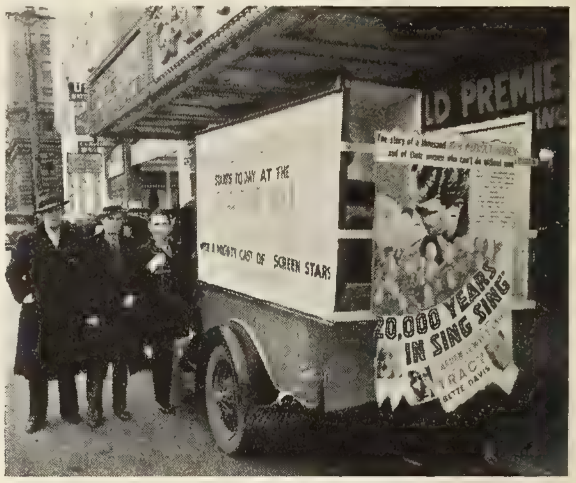
WORLD PREMIERE WAS CHANCE FOR PERRY TO WAGE SMASH CAMPAIGN

Fred Perry, wide-awake manager of the Capitol, in Binghamton, N. Y., didn't overlook a bet when his theatre enjoyed the unusual opportunity of billing "20,000 Years in Sing-Sing," showing as a world premiere. The picture was given to the house in a pre-release arrangement and Perry made things hum with his campaign.

In addition to smash newspaper advertising and great poster work, Perry effected a tieup with Montgomery Ward for three co-operative broadcasts, each putting in a tremendous plug for the picture. In addition to this radio hook up he also arranged with Station WNBF for two 15-minute transcripts of the trial in the picture as a station feature. He procured local dramatic talent, members of the legal profession in Binghamton, to take part in these two dramatic broadcasts.



A tieup was also effected with the Public Library, which used three thousand book marks advertising the picture. These book marks were placed in all outgoing books. He engineered an announcement of the picture opening before two thousand attending a set of bouts and also succeeded in advertising the picture before thousands attending a marathon dance. Three book store tieups resulted in corking window displays of numerous stills from the picture.



For the first time in the history of a motion picture theatre, the Binghamton newspapers broke their strict rule against giving a picture more than four days' advance publicity. Stories about "20,000 Years in Sing Sing" filled news columns for a week before the opening day. Perry also promoted a 60-piece band from the Catholic Orphan Asylum, playing music in the front lobby for the crowd that had been waiting for the doors to be opened, as can be seen from the picture herewith.

For street ballyhoo he rigged up an automobile (see photo) equipped with a loud speaker. This truck was driven through the streets of Binghamton, stopping on each corner to announce the coming of the picture. Fred Perry is seen holding the microphone in the picture.

Perry didn't overlook his front while putting on this smash campaign. The box office was made up to resemble the outside of a prison cell with barred window, as the accompanying photo will show. It's been some little time since we've reported on Fred Perry's show-selling, and we're glad to be in touch with him again. We'll hope to tell you more about his work in future issues.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified.

RKO Breaks Rule Sniping "Kong"

Radio-Keith-Orpheum last week went in for circus sniping for the first time, and after placing half-a-million "King Kong" heralds and posters throughout four territories, opened the picture simultaneously at both Radio City theatres and grossed $90,000 over the week-end, despite the tightened money situation as a result of the bank holiday.

The wholesale billing campaign, which was staged by Bob Sisk, in charge of advertising for the RKO companies, and Terry Turner, assistant, invaded the highways and by-ways all the way from New York to Albany, on both sides; throughout Long Island, to Quogue, and cross-country to Riverhead; all of Staten Island and Westchester County, to Hartford, and along both railroad and automobile highways to Wilmington to catch the crowds going to and from the Washington inaugural. Besides being RKO's first participation in sniping activities, it was said to be the widest billing ever given a motion picture at a single theatre.

RKO, which heretofore has confined Radio City promotional activities in the field to regular billposting within a limited Metropolitan area, also set up thousands of special institutional four-sheets both on the Radio City attraction and on house policies, including prices.

Air Express Plays Santa to Newsmen

Conversion of a storage spot under a stairway into a camera dark room and a pier of the Railway Express Agency into a vantage point for the cameramen was the solution of a predicament in which L. W. Smith, San Francisco representative of Hearst Metrotone News, found himself when the battle fleet anchored in the Bay following the Pacific war maneuvers.

At 1:20 p. m. Mr. Smith phoned the Railway Express Agency that the MGM studios at Culver City had called for some special shots. The air-express deadline was 2:30. S. M. Heck, air division agent, offered the use of the REA pier. Apparatus was rushed to the Terminal and the film removed in storage place under a stairway in the terminal pier building. The shipment was ready at 2:40. To catch the United Air Lines express-plane connection was made at the uptown office of United. Delivery was made at 6:50 p. m. at Burbank Field, Los Angeles.

Monogram to Send Press to Albany for "Twist" Premiere

Motion picture editors of New York City newspapers and representatives of the trade press will accompany Ray Johnston, president, and executives of Monogram, to Albany Friday, on a special train, to attend the world premiere of the company's new production, "Oliver Twist," which will take place Friday evening. A press banquet will follow the showing and the party will return to New York Saturday evening.

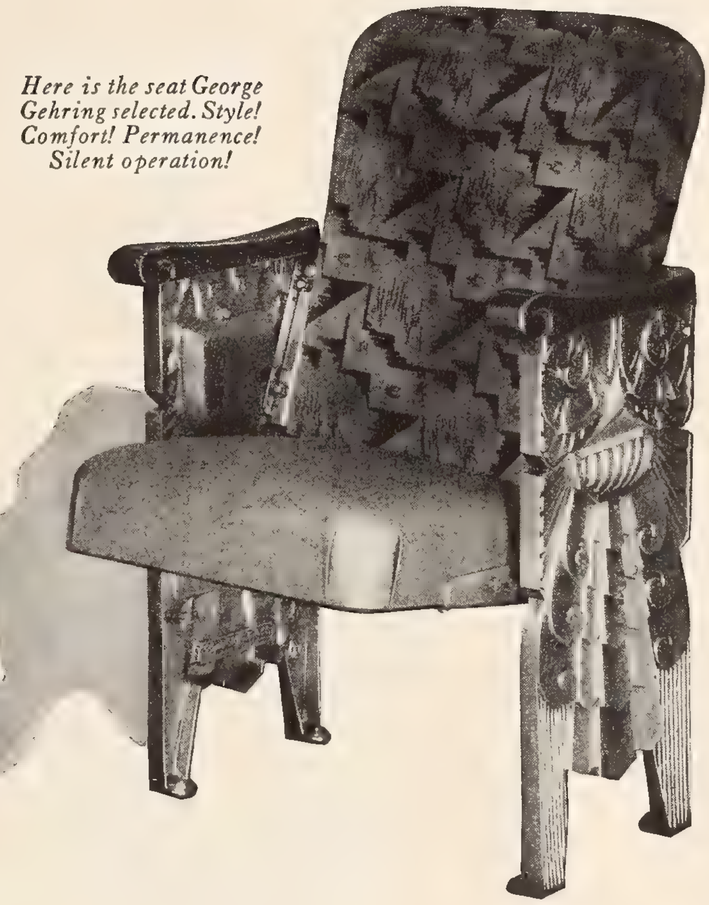
Dear Mr. Arterburn:

I want to thank you very much for the service you gave us in connection with the manufacture and installation of our new seats.

I might mention that this new seating is helping to keep our house filled to capacity. Of course I expected increased business when I bought such elaborate seats, but I can now say that they have actually paid for themselves in ten months.

Yours very truly,

Geo. Gehring



Here is the seat George Gehring selected. Style! Comfort! Permanence! Silent operation!

SURE competition's tough," said George Gehring in discussing the depressed conditions, "but if we can't beat them to the best films we'll beat them on comfort." This man is a real showman. He knows that only part of the "merchandise" he's selling is entertainment and that the other important part is comfort. Sit back and let competitors get his business? Not he! "Put some real comfort in this house! Increase the seating capacity! We'll show those fellows down the street," he said—and we did.

It's false economy to put off reseating in these days when it's harder than ever to fill houses. Call in a Heywood man. Remember, George Gehring said it paid in ten months.

Observations

¶ If the motion picture had never developed an appeal to the adult, it still should have found a sizeable audience in Youth. The cinema has no grown-up patron so enthusiastic as the youngster. He clamors to go to the "movies" often, and at least American parents are indulgent toward their children. Although the child of from six to sixteen has his favorites, he is not particularly critical. Given most any picture with motives understandable to him, he can have a wonderful time, and when he is especially delighted, he remembers the show for days, enjoying it again in telling his companions about it, in reliving it in his imagination.

Even in the larger cities the very young never had a theatre until the motion picture came along. Once in a while the stage theatre offered them "Uncle Tom's Cabin" or something consisting in an assortment of the better known virtues parading in velvet panties. For the most part, however, that glamorous place, the theatre (which is so specifically a thing of those devices that stir the young), was locked to the minor. Not until the theatre began to present the curious new "motion pictures" were children invited.

The patronage of the young is still of profound economic importance to the business of making and exhibiting motion pictures. By the many millions, children continue to pay it their dimes and quarters. Their theatre-going also exerts a major influence upon the theatre-going of adults. Before long, indeed, they will be adults themselves, with the habit, if properly cultivated, of "going to the movies." Thus one well may wonder why so little really shrewd attention is given their interests and tastes in screen amusements.

¶ Usually in charging neglect of the young patron, the production branch of the industry is blamed. At this moment, however, we are more interested in the use made of the material at hand—an interest inspired, we may as well confess, by the recent necessity of sitting through an interminable dialogue-conscious matrimonial treatise in order to see Mickey Mouse. We are not between six and sixteen, but we understood then what the kids have to put up with.

It is a trick of the trade, one suspects, to offer something to please everybody. It's a good trick, if you can do it. But when everybody is pleased and everybody is displeased by the same program, the illusion belongs exclusively to the one executing the trick. And it is precisely in the application of this device that the young patron loses out. It has a tendency to place "Mickey Mouse," "Our Gang" and other favorites of the children on programs having features consisting in crime-gone-Hollywood, penthouse hotcha or drawing room talk-talk-talk. In one instance the feature is such that parents will not let their children attend, in another the youngsters get only 25% or so of the entertainment due them.

A shrewder method of using the pictures that are available to encourage the patronage of the young (and to encourage the good will of responsible parents as well!) would be, we think, to place on the program having shorts strongly appealing to children, a feature that is also eminently interesting and suitable to them. The effort to do so would at times be frustrated by booking conditions, but more often it would succeed.

Now more than ever we think the effort advisable. Until a few years ago, a definite distinction between programs of all-adult appeal, and programs of child-and-adult appeal may not have been warranted. But because of the values which sound has apparently placed in control of the selection of story material, we think that some such distinction has come to merit showmanlike consideration.

¶ A moment ago we were speaking about shrewd program-making. An example of this, with a lot of money added, is the kind of shows which the Capitol theatre in New York (Roxy's old stamping ground) has been offering lately. Here is a theatre so badly designed for the exhibition of any kind of performance, much less motion pictures, that it may well be the most inexpertly contrived playhouse in the country. Yet this house enjoys vast custom. The public goes there. To see its shows. Yes, the play is the thing! But how much more effective, how much more conducive to the habit of motion picture theatregoing the play can be if the theatre is designed to serve it well, in technics and comfort.

¶ On several occasions rather recently we have noted Mr. Terry Ramsaye's insistence, voiced in the editorial pages and elsewhere in Motion Picture Herald, that the so-called legitimate theatre is done for, overcome and supplanted by the vocable motion picture. Somehow we see the motion picture as another form of theatrical art entirely, and if we may be allowed a criticism of current attitudes, we offer the suggestion that motion picture makers are already too interested in supplanting the legitimate drama to realize the powers of the motion picture.—G. S.

CUTTING THE COST OF GOOD LIGHTING

By FRANCIS M. FALGE

How the manager can readily effect savings without reducing the brilliance the theatre needs, told by an engineer

ECONOMY is the order of the day. Cutting out something is one of the easiest known methods of reducing expenditures, but the effected saving is ofttimes reflected in a material reduction in box office returns. Prevention of lighting waste, not elimination of lighting, should be the watchword, and waste prevention may readily effect greater savings with actual financial benefit. In a word, dollars can be saved if your lighting costs are subject to an earnest, methodical economic scrutiny.

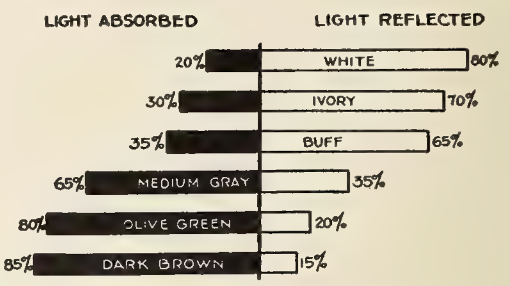
Good lighting after all is a balance between lamp costs, current costs, lamps of proper size for the wiring (or better, adequate wiring), and maintenance costs. A candle is cheap, but it would be very costly to attempt to illuminate a theatre with candles!

The cost of light is partially dependent upon locality. In some places current cost is the high element; in others, maintenance tops the list. These factors should be studied and lighting plans made accordingly.

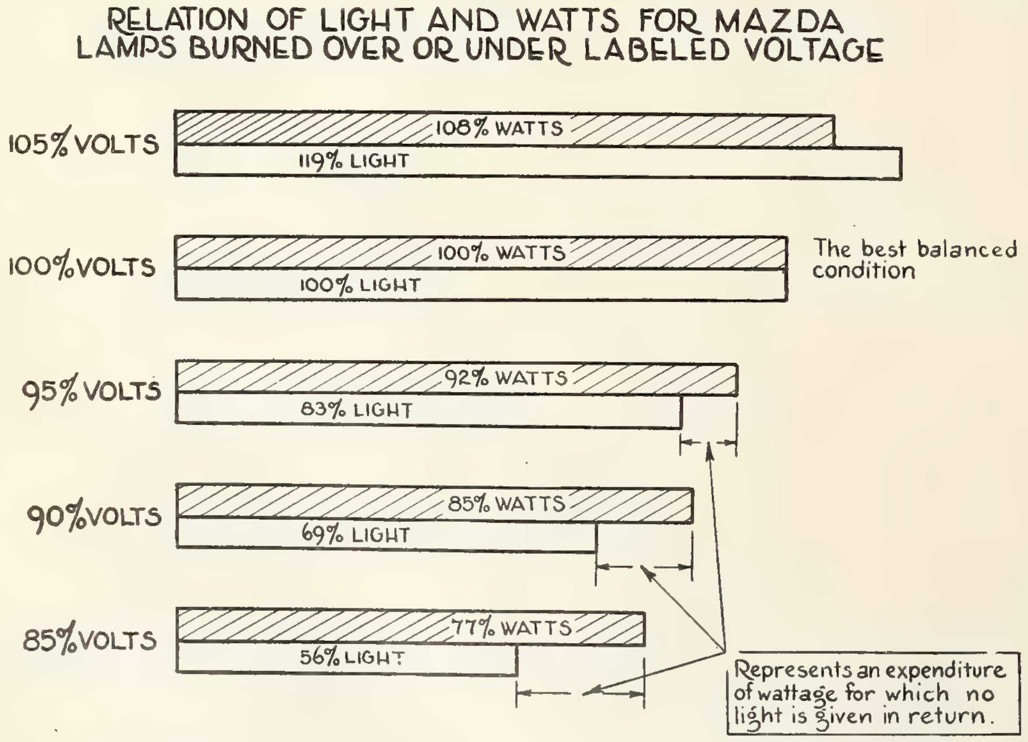
WIRING REQUISITES

Electricity is the life blood of the modern theatre. The arteries that carry this vitalizing current are in the physical form of conduits, wires, cable and control equipment. A theatre that has wiring which consists and interferes with an abundant flow of energy is like a man with hardened arteries. Some theatres inadequately wired from the beginning are prematurely old, electrically. Others, in which the demands for electric service have increased so that they exceed the normal capacity of the electrical equipment originally installed, suffer from poor electrical circulation and find themselves handicapped in comparison with their adequately-wired neighbors.

Signs, especially, require more and more current as the neighborhood brightness increases if they are to keep apace or ahead in attracting power. The marquee originally designed for 15- or 25-watt lamps, now often needs 40- and 60-watt lamps to make a showing against improved street lighting, competing show windows, etc., and in many cases this seriously overloads the wiring, and much of the increased energy goes into the heating of the wires than into the production of light. The lamps then operate inefficiently and have a dull yellowish appearance. The actual effect may be checked by making measurements of the voltage at the panel board and at one of the sockets in question with the lamps operating. As long as the voltage drop does not exceed two or three volts, this part of the system is satisfactory and is not responsible for serious waste. (The accompanying chart illustrates what happens if excessive voltage drops should happen to exist.)



Dirty or dark surfaces waste light. Clean surfaces and light tints save much money.



RELATION OF LIGHT AND WATTS FOR MAZDA LAMPS BURNED OVER OR UNDER LABELED VOLTAGE

Lamps designed for voltage at socket, not panel board, should be used to effect low cost.

If the voltage at the sockets is only a few percent. less than at the panels, the use of the next lower size of lamps may result in proper light at minimum cost. If the loss in the wiring is high, however, the waste is excessive and a change to larger feeders would justify itself by the savings alone. In addition to the saving, however, a bright "sparkling" appearance of the installation results.

LAMPS

Using up old lamps is quite an activity in many theatres where various and sundry odd-colored lamps have collected since their use for various special occasions. For example, sometime ago the writer observed several floor lamps in the lounge of a theatre, and each of these lamps was equipped with a 150-watt natural-colored red lamp, a 150-watt natural-colored blue lamp, and a 60-watt natural-colored green lamp, giving in all about the equivalent of light obtained from a 40-watt flame-colored lamp. The using of these old lamps was decidedly not an economy, the operating expense being $3.24 per floor lamp every month, as compared with an expense of 36c for the 40-watt lamp. It would have been much cheaper to break up these lamps rather than burn them in this manner, but the logical thing to do would be to store them for the next special occasion, for after all they were rather to be regarded as quite expensive lamps.

IN MANY CASES the heavy saturated colors—red, green and blue—are used where a much better effect for a smaller expenditure might be obtained by using the available standard tinted old rose, flame-tint, ivory, amber-orange and yellow lamps. These tinted lamps have efficiencies of five or more times those of the saturated colors.

This same criticism holds true regarding the use of old-style lamps, which are inefficient as compared with present-day lines and which waste additional light because of their age. Carbon lamps and straight filament lamps are included in this category.

The use of the proper type of lamp has much to do with economy. Natural-colored lamps are inherently expensive, yet in many cases are essential because they produce color so effectively. Coves lighted in blue are an example. Yet, if space allows, the purchase of color caps—or better, of reflectors equipped with colored glass—allows the use of inexpensive standard lamps, and the initial cost of the color equipment is soon offset by the resultant saving in lamp expense.

Inside-coated lamps, because of their low cost, good unlighted appearance and diffusion when lighted, are satisfactory for fixtures and decorations that are placed near the patrons. Again, it should be stressed that, in general, tints, rather than pure colors, give better effects and emit much more light than the darker colors.

Operation of Displays

The periods of operation of displays have much to do with their economy, but it is probably true that more loss occurs from not operating them at the essential times than operating them needlessly. Because it is customary, signs are often not turned on until dusk or even until it is dark. The records of traffic, which can usually be obtained from the local police department or by rough checks over various periods, afford interesting data on which to make a decision. In general, there are two peak traffic periods, about 5:30 in the afternoon, and 9:30 at night. Yet how often do we find electrical signs in operation during the early peak period?

Although bright signs are desirable, excessive brightness destroys legibility in addition to adding unnecessarily to lighting expense.

When the theatre opens its doors, whether it is daylight or dark, it is decidedly good business to operate the signs to let people know that it is open. And during cloudy days, the signs are almost sure to catch the attention of enough people to more than offset the cost of operation. An analysis will show that the cost of the average sign will require only about one or two customers per show to offset the cost of operating the signs effectively.

For economy purposes it is desirable to wire or rewire the sign so that the bright circuits — theatre names, for instance—are separate from those less bright, such as attraction letters. The bright circuit can then be operated during the above mentioned periods at a saving, as compared with the cost of operating all of the signs.

Motion in Displays

There are many popular misconceptions about the operation of flashers. In many cases, however, motion is so effective that it should be incorporated in displays, in order to enhance their value. When motion is compared with steady burning, tests have shown that it is many times more effective as a "stopping agent."

The economies effected by flashing, however, are an additional recommendation for it. "On" and "off" flashing, for instance, cuts the operating period of a display in half, resulting in the following important economies:

a. A reduction of practically 50 per cent in power cost
b. Equal burning life of lamps but twice the useful life, so half the lamp cost
c. A reduction to practically half of the maintenance cost due to longer lamp life (The flasher maintenance uses some of this saving.)

If four circuits or running effects are used, the reduction in the above cases is approximately 25%.

TWO BRITISH VENTURES IN MODERNISM

Including a novel way to augment the box office with nice dignity and little expense

By BERNARD CHARMAN

THEATRE CONSTRUCTION in Great Britain today shows the influence of modern ideas more than ever. There is less deference shown to stereotyped standards of design than at any other period in the history of the British cinema. Houses recently opened by the two major circuits operating in Britain provide indisputable evidence of the fact, and in the case of the Gaumont-British chain, especially, there is proof of an intensive effort to find new methods of expression.

The first indication of this trend came with the completion of the unusual New Victoria at Westminster, London, little more than two years ago, early visitors to which received a shock on first seeing the fantastic interior decoration intended to represent an under-sea atmosphere. At the same time the outside of this building also sounded an unusual note, though its treatment was on the severe and formal lines of the modern German school, rather than the bizarre effect of the auditorium decorative scheme.

As we say in England, much water has flowed under Waterloo Bridge since that time, and though the architect's range of expression has been more restrained than in this extreme experimental case, the development has consistently followed the modern tradition. The latest stage in this progressive movement is exemplified in two theatres opened by the Gaumont-British organization during the winter. The theatres in question are the Gaumont Palaces (generic title for all the company's newest houses) at Lewisham, London, and at Wolverhampton.

Of the two Gaumont Palaces, the one at Lewisham is the more impressive, representing a reported cost of around £250,000 sterling (more than a million dollars). The main elevation shows a straightness of line almost mechanical in its severity, with the built-up letters of the title along the top enhancing the effect. The background material is cream-colored marble terrazzo, and the ornamental horizontal bands are of blue and gold mosaic. Effective contrast to the horizontal nature of the front is achieved in two broad vertical pillars of black terrazzo, which support the lintel of a large central window unit.

An appropriately modern feature is the provision on both flanks of the facade for illuminated strip lettering, which takes the place of the old-fashioned poster or cut-out display and puts over its message in a highly dignified manner. The use of polished black terrazzo for the lower surfaces follows a fashion popular in London construction circles today, and presents a face that time and weather will not destroy.

The side elevations of this theatre, both abutting on public streets, are identical in a treatment which is slightly more conventional by reason of their frank brick surfaces, but which achieve the necessary modernity in a series of long vertical windows. In their finished appearances these elevations almost suggest a modern ecclesiastical structure.

A similar freshness of expression is apparent in the roomy entrance hall. From the floor, constructed of terrazzo with decorative lines of black marble and bright mosaic, to the walls and columns, covered richly in polished mocassar wood and walnut, and the ceiling, with its unique lighting fittings, all has been conceived in the new style.

The main lighting fittings should be studied particularly. Constructed of opal tubing, each takes the shape of a double ring, with a black circular reflector adjusted horizontally along their common diameter. The tubes are 1¼ inches in thickness and give a continuous light, and they are seconded by the more normal pillar lighting.

A concession to the spoiled patron of today is found between the entrance hall and the auditorium, in the form of a pair of circular crush-rooms or rotundas at both stalls and circle level, in which incoming customers may wait. These crush-rooms stand at the extremities of two-bow-shaped corridors behind the auditorium. Without extraneous decoration, these corridors are distinguished by horizontal bands standing out from the highly polished walls. Here is an unusual provision suggesting a way to augment a theatre's income. This consists in recessed vertical display frames which are rented for advertising purposes to local tradesmen. Thest are shown in one of the accompanying photographic illustrations.

THERE IS NO departure from dignified simplicity in the treatment of the auditorium. Its main features are a series of severe and quite modernized Gothic arches, between which are fluted pillars, splayed at the top to merge into the ceiling. In these and the arcades beyond them, relieved with tall draped windows, there is an ecclesiastical impression.

The feet of the side arches are stepped down towards the proscenium, and below them the flat walls are relieved by thin parallel bands stepped down in harmony with them. As a means of relief a single piece of sculpture flanks the proscenium on each side, the figures being intended to represent the senses of Sight and Sound as they are awakened and stimulated by the Film.

The ceiling is dominated by a series of broad curves, radiating from the proscenium head, with concealed lights carried in the cornice of each. Other light is provided in the side arcades—exits from the circle—in pendant fittings of a fanciful nature.

As the focus of vision, the proscenium opening has been treated more richly than the remainder of the theatre, and has a clustered columnar frame in silver and blue. Rectangular in shape, it has a width of 55 feet, and fronts one of the largest stages in London, 85 feet wide and 36 feet deep.

The auditorium is of a broad fan shape, a plan freely adopted in the modern British theatre. It has seats for 3,300 persons, 2,000 of them being in the stalls, and the remainder in a wide circle with a sweep of 180 feet from side to side. Behind the circle is a roomy restaurant seating 200.

The projectors are three Gaumont mechanisms. British Acoustic reproducing equipment is installed. The projection room has an adjacent dining room.

The stage is equipped with a grid 75 feet up, four-color lighting and a cyclorama background.

MUCH THAT has been said about the Gaumont Palace, Lewisham, might well be repeated in respect of the Wolverhampton theatre, though the latter has not been constructed on the sumptuous scale of its London counterpart. For it stands in a more industrial locality and has little more than half the seating capacity of the Lewisham theatre. Moreover, it is an alteration of an old motion picture theatre which. in its appointments, had fallen behind the times.

The title of this theatre is also constructed of built up letters, sandwiched between the two main pillars. Immediately below it is a narrow balcony, with a horizontal panel for film announcements. The entrance is shaded by a wide marquee, with two minor marquees flanking it, one at each side.

The entrance hall has walls panelled in grained walnut wood. Its floor also is brightly splashed with mosaic, and its lighting fittings are of modern design. From this hall, walnut glazed doors communicate with the stalls, and stairs lead to the circle.

In the auditorium the decorative treatment is noticeably less classical and severe than at Lewisham. The wide surface of the ceiling is broken only by two rows of pendant lights, with lines of bright color on the cornice (which conceals further lighting units). The whole surface of the walls above the dado is covered with a woven fabric of subdued pattern in light green, fawn and gold, while the dado itself is of a simple blue. The lower wall surfaces are of polished wood, with narrow horizontal bands forming the sole relief. All the seats are upholstered in a dark rose material, which harmonizes quietly with the wall colors.

Practically the whole of the ornament in the auditorium is concentrated at the proscenium end. The opening is again a strict rectangle and is topped by a wide radiating sweep, fluted and merging into the ceiling proper. Not only is this feature intended as decoration, but also as a sound board. Flanking the proscenium opening are tall columns and niches in green and silver, lighted from above.

Both of these theatres have been designed under the supervision of W. E. Trent, chief architect of Gaumont-British. It is not more than three years ago that Mr. Trent expressed to me that there was no necessity for great creative effort in the planning of a circuit theatre. Obviously his views, and those of the corporation, have changed since then.

A THEATRE ARCHITECT VISITS EUROPE

By S. CHARLES LEE

In which, as the second of three reports, this eminent cinema designer investigates the newsreel theatres and Les Folies Bergere

THEY ARE building newsreel theatres in Paris somewhat after the style of the Hollywood Studio theatre, using the electric eye to operate the entrance, eliminating a doorman. The capacities are about 300. They have built one of these theatres in a railroad station. This 300-seat house is doing a business of 5,000 paid admissions per day. Trump that if you can!

The architecture of the interior is simplified modern, and the exterior is of glass. Alongside of the screen they throw the time of departures and arrivals of trains five minutes before time, and if a train is late, this is also announced. No particular efforts are made to take care of the comforts of the patrons. They sell you the ticket. There are no doormen or ushers. You go in and find your way around the best you can. There are no toilet facilities in connection with this theatre for either men or women. They consider that they can use the railroad station facilities if they care to. It was also interesting to know that the projection room had no toilet facilities. The projectionists work seven days a week without a swing man. Their salary is $12 per week. The general admission to this newsreel theatre is 12c. It is the object of the owners to run them eventually for 4c.

All of the larger picture theatres are operated exclusively for the benefit of the exhibitor. It seems that the patrons will swallow anything that they are given, and the attitude of the theatre is to see how many times a patron can be insulted and come back for more. The general admission is $1 for the main floor and 65c for the balcony. When you go to buy your ticket, the cashier seems to be asking you, "Why do you want to go to this show? Why don't you go some place else? Why don't you have the right change ready? Did we send for you? If you don't like it you can lump it!" You tip the usher for your seat, and during the performance people are running up and down the aisles selling everything except hamburger sandwiches. They sell popcorn, candy, ice cream and drinks, somewhat after the fashion of a baseball park.

The screen is loaded with advertisements; in fact, a two-hour show will devote fully an hour to advertising and selling.

THE ARCHITECTURE of the Parisian picture theatres is almost exclusively modern. Most of the buildings are alterations, as it seems that very few buildings are torn down in Europe but are remodeled for one generation after the next. While the old architecture of Europe was, of course, the precedent and the inspiration for American architecture, the modern in general is not as good as the modern that is being done in America. This is accounted for by the fact that during the past ten years America has had more building experience than all of Europe. Pictures shown to us in America of European constructions are of the outstanding buildings of each country, and there are comparatively few of them.

NOW SHOWING

The architect in France is as great a chiseler as the average French business man. When an architect draws plans in France, he prepares only the architectural part and provides none of the engineering. When he takes bids on a steel-constructed building, for example, he will show the architecture, and the steel contractor furnishes with his bid a system of engineering. In a comparatively new theatre in Paris, the Folies Bergere, which is their outstanding musical comedy theatre, the balcony is held up by columns in the middle of the auditorium as was done in America 25 years ago. The architect charges the owner 5% for his plans and collects another 2% from the contractor.

Speaking of the Folies Bergere reminds me of the experience of going to see this internationally discussed performance. In making investigations about the ticket sale for this theatre, I found that on applying at the box office they referred me to a ticket agent across the street. This ticket agent charged 80c more than at the box office, so I went back to the box office and told them in broken but certain French that I intended to buy my ticket at the box office. Since I was so insistent about it, they sold me a ticket and handed me what turned out to be nothing but a receipt for my money. As I had purchased the receipt at the main floor box office (there being a separate one for the sale of each class of ticket), I knew that I was entitled to a fairly good position in the auditorium. I was just about to walk out of the vestibule when a Frenchman about four feet high, wearing a trick hat, grabbed me by the arm and started to pull me into the foyer. I told him I did not want to go into the foyer now, but he insisted on dragging me there. He was the first Frenchman I had seen who was small enough for me to knock out before help could reach him, and I was just about to take charge of this situation when I noticed that other people were going from the box office to the foyer, so, curbing my desire to floor a Frenchman, I went into the foyer. There was a sort of judge's bench in the centre with three men behind it and one standing alongside, acting as bailiff. The short Frenchman handed my receipt to this bailiff, who in turn handed it to the three judges. They looked me over and evidently decided that I did not have smallpox, and issued me a ticket which was in about the seventh row center. The bailiff delivered this ticket to me after I had tipped the short Frenchman as well as himself. I later learned that the only difference between the receipt purchased at the box office and the ticket scalper's is about 80c, which is split with the theatre.

After you have received your ticket, you pass from this foyer into a very large inner foyer, this inner foyer being about fifty per cent larger than the auditorium proper. It is built with a high ceiling in a cheap, bizarre modern architecture. There is a band platform, and the room is filled with tables. Here you can sit around and order drinks before the show and during intermission. Along the sides are concessions selling phonograph records, sheet music, toy novelties, plaster statuettes and dirty post cards. The main stairway to the balcony also leads from the end of this foyer. Passing under the sides of the stair, you enter the auditorium, but before entering which you must buy a program for 12 cents.

An usherette, whom you must tip, takes you to your seat. I gave her the customary French tip, which is one franc. She immediately refused to let me sit down, advising me that her fees were one franc per person. Although the auditorium did not fill up entirely, there were crowds of people standing behind the last row of seats and around the sides. This is due to the fact that everything is sold in classes, there being first-, second- and third-class on trains, in theatres and even on the street busses. On the street busses, third-class gives you permission to stand on the platform. In the theatre it allows you standing room only.

There are extra folding seats built into the end seats along the aisles. When the auditorium is full, they fold these seats down into the aisle, giving 100% seating space, and if a panic, every man for himself.

THE PRODUCTION that is put on is very similar to our Ziegfeld Follies—without the costumes! I don't mean to infer that they haven't beautiful costumes because in some scenes they do wear them, but most of the scenes rely on the pink and white instead of the artificial costume effects. The lighting effects were good although not spectacular, but the equipment of the house was so poor that the spotlights were arranged on the front of the balcony with the operator sitting in the front row. The front curtain did not fit the proscenium arch and whenever they wanted to close the opening for an intermission, ushers had to release the curtain from the balcony level boxes.

The plan of the auditorium, as in most French auditoriums, is in horseshoe shape. This leaves a block of seats on each side that have a sight line that is satisfactory only to a giraffe.

The toilet accommodations are terrible. They have provided about two toilets for each sex in a 2,000-seat auditorium. The old roller-towel is used, and this they launder once a month whether it needs it or not. There is an attendant holding a plate placed at the head of the stairs leading from the toilets. She wears a sign which indicates that the tip is 2c, and should you try to get by without paying this fee, the argument would be carried over far into the second act.

As soon as the curtain was rung after the first act, I heard the sound of a loud clarinet duet playing the Song of India, coming from the foyer. This wailing was in sharp competition with the orchestra that was playing on the foyer platform. Going down the stairs to investigate this screech I was tapped for 30c and allowed to continue. At the foot of the steps I found a small auditorium seating about 300. On the stage were two clarinet players and a tom-tom drummer dressed in Arabian costumes. Shortly there appeared two Harlem dingies, who put on a bawdy dance so badly that even Barnum wouldn't have taken a sucker's money for such a bad exhibition.

The Folies Bergere is an entirely new building, not one of the alterations. The architecture of the front is very striking. After the last curtain, by the time you get to the street you will find the chorus almost en masse on the sidewalk in front of the theatre and you can pick out the one you like best. These Frenchmen sure have an eye for business.

The Paris Opera House is probably the greatest precedent for American theatres in the world. The exterior is magnificent and the entrance staircase almost undescribable in its beautiful composition of marbles. Admission can be had to the Opera for as little as 20c. It was built by the government at a cost of $50,000,000 and is operated by the state. There is a carriage entrance that has its own entrance foyer whose beauty is unparalleled in the annals of architecture.

A ticket is purchased inside the main door and you find your way alone up the stairs to the level your ticket indicates. One of the spacious salons, formerly used for receptions of the king, has a bar built in. It does a very handsome business. Having arrived late, on approaching the tunnel where my seat was located, I found six elderly women dressed in black alpaca seated about the tunnel entrance. When I approached the doorway one of these women blocked my entrance and refused to let me pass without a tip. This arrangement is a concession, and these women keep the concession all their lives, handing it down to their offspring. They clean up the theatre, and I presume they live on their tips.

THE AUDITORIUM is not as good architecturally as the lobby or exterior. There are different levels of boxes built in horseshoe shape, which are nothing but balconies divided off. The seats at both sides of this horseshoe are worthless and in some cases there are seats built where the stage cannot be seen at all. On the particular night that I saw the performance all the available space was occupied, even if the stage was not in view.

Cabaret entertainment is both varied and unique in Paris. The Lido, probably the most exclusive cabaret, is entered through a long arch and an elevator takes you down to the basement level, where you find a very modern room. On the left side as you come in is a small dance floor with a standard band platform. Surrounding the dance floor there are tables about two rows deep. Directly to the right there is a large space with groups of tables and beyond this space is a huge swimming pool. All along one side of the swimming pool there are two tiers of comfortable dressing rooms. During the evening you can dance or swim, and at various intervals an entertainment is put on either on the dance floor, or singers entertain from gondolas on the swimming pool. The effect is very unique.

When you sit at your table you are given a wine list containing nothing but champagne at a minimum of $10 a bottle. Being next to their racket, I insisted on another menu, or wine list, and was informed that I could look around the room and see that at every table there was champagne. I still insisted on ordering our drinks from another list, which was then brought to me, and after placing my order for a less expensive wine, they brought a bucket of ice with a dummy champagne bottle and set it on the table so they could sell the next sucker the idea that nothing was served but champagne!

There is another interesting bit of entertainment in connection with the Moulin Rouge. Directly flanking the entrance to the Moulin Rouge is a tunnel passage through which you enter a cave. You are seated to wait in this cave while they sell you a glass of wine. Then you are led through a dark passageway which is filled with wax figures indicating the night life of the Apache. The wax figures are very well done and lifelike. In some groups they have a real figure seated in the midst, and it startles you when he moves. During this scare your pocket is usually picked. On the way out the guide announces that he is not wax and the customary tip is required.

Entering the main hall there is a large dance hall on one side and an equally large platform on the other. In the center of this platform and towards the edge of the dance floor are tables where you sit and order drinks and talk to the girls when they go by. Along the wall there are groups of concessions such as are found at the usual beach resort—games in which you throw

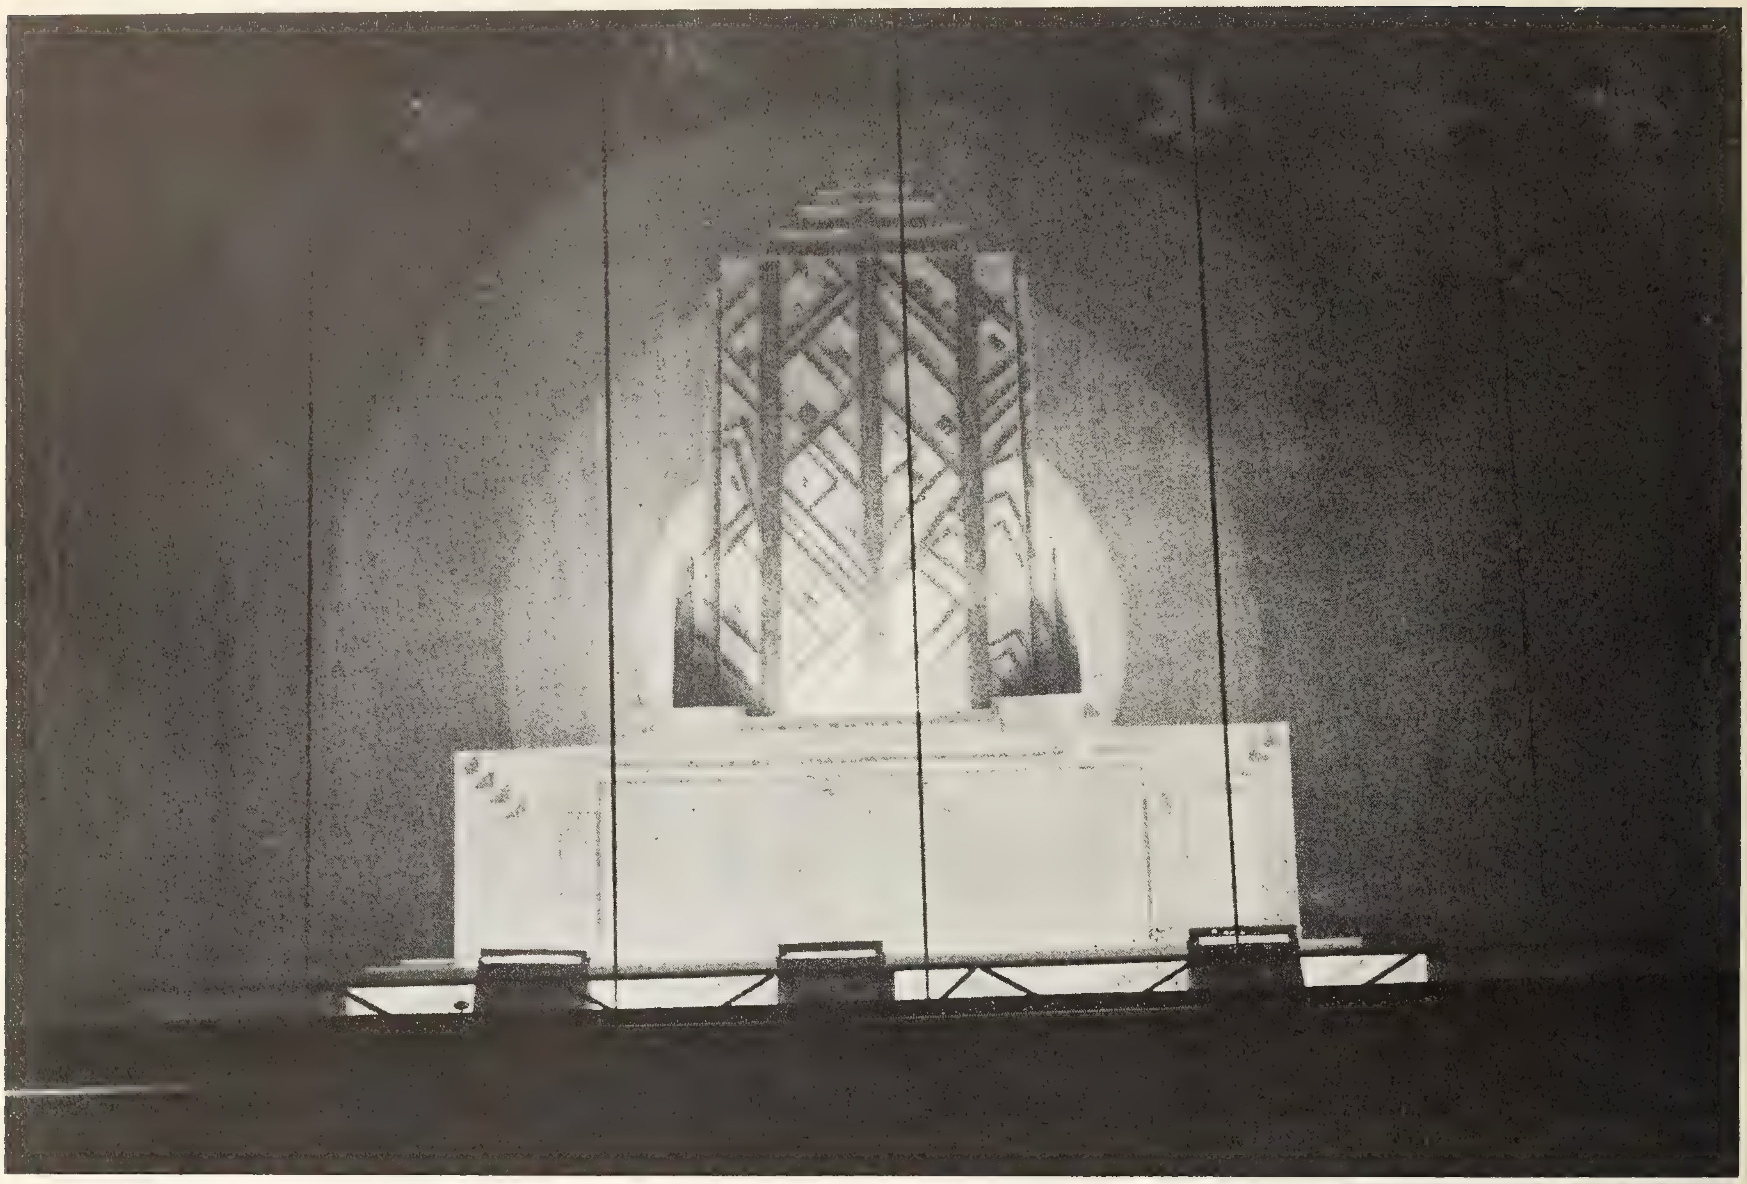
USING THE SOUND SCREEN AS A SCRIM FOR EFFECTS



Discovering the transparency of the perforated screen for the subtle combination of cinematic and stage elements in incidental productions

By HAROLD NYE

IT IS NOT generally known that the standard perforated sound picture screen makes an excellent scrim for use in combining the projected picture with living figures on the stage. The fact that the perforations only constitute about 4% or 5% of the surface of the screen, tends to make this appear impractical, but a most impressive effect can be readily obtained, as the accompanying photograph will show.

The photograph is of a set used for the dedication performance of a new theatre. It was employed in the following way:

A specially made sound trailor, "Yesterday And Today," was made showing the neighborhood of the theatre. Some available stock-shots comprised the "Yesterday" portion of the film, and these were projected on the standard-sized screen. The following "Today" shots showing the improved neighborhood, the theatre, etc., then were projected almost the full width of the 55-foot proscenium, the screen masking being run off to that size. A waving American flag, photographed in Technicolor, was then projected on the screen with a color background from the Brenograph projector. A band on the stage took up the music, and the horns and picture sheet backing were flown. The set lights back of the screen were then slowly faded in, showing the stage setting, consisting of the Statue of Liberty, soldiers, sailors and the band.

After a minute of this the stage lights were faded out, the brail was closed in, and the mask, horns and picture sheet backing were restored to their normal positions. The audience, not understanding how it was possible to see through the picture screen, was quite mystified.

Modifications of this idea can be used effectively in conjunction with organ solos using slides or effects from the booth, with singers and actors fading in and out of the picture as a vision. It is necessary to use two or three times as much light on the subjects as with an ordinary scrim.

The seams of the screen show a little, as can be seen in the photograph, but not enough to become objectionable. The photograph was taken before the masking piece was in place across the bottom of the screen to conceal the framework and the olivettes used as footlights.

LAW FOR EXHIBITORS: RECENT DECISIONS

By LEO T. PARKER

Reviewing a selected group of late litigations involving points of law of specific interest to theatre owners and managers

IN THE ABSENCE of some statutory regulation or restriction to the contrary theatres, circuses, raectracks, private parks, and other places of amusement and entertainment stand on the same basis as any other private business, and are under the sole control of the proprietor or manager, who may admit or exclude whomsoever he chooses. Nor is the rule affected by the fact that the patron is the holder of a ticket, providing the money paid for the ticket is returned and the patron is ejected without undue force.

For illustration, in the late case of Capital Theatre Company v. Compton (54 S. W. [2d] 620), it was disclosed that the charge of admission in the Capital theatre for the afternoon entertainment is 20 cents for those over 12 years of age, and 10 cents for those under that age. On June 2nd a girl named Compton lacked a few days of being 12 years of age, but had the appearance of being much older. On the afternoon of that day she and her younger sister went to the theatre. She purchased two tickets at 10 cents and handed them to the man at the door. She was just going to sit down when the theatre manager approached and informed her that she would have to obtain a 20-cent ticket, since she was over 12 years of age. The girl claimed that she was under 12 years of age, but the manager refused to believe this to be true. He refunded the 10 cents admission price and requested the girl to leave the theatre, which she did.

At a later date, suit was filed against the owner of the theatre to recover damages on the grounds that the girl had been ejected from the theatre unlawfully, and that as a result thereof she was made nervous for a considerable period of time.

However, in view of the fact that no undue force had been exerted to eject the girl; that the price paid by her for the ticket had been refunded; and since no state or city law specifically prohibited theatre operators from refunding the purchase price to patrons and requesting them to leave, although the lower court held the theatre owner liable, the higher court reversed this decision, and said:

"The ticket does not confer the right to enter or remain in the theatre unless the holder be disorderly or otherwise objectionable. It is a mere license revocable at the will of the proprietor, or his agent, who may decline to permit the holder to enter, or remove him after he has taken his seat, and, unless the denial of admittance or the expulsion of the holder is accompanied by insult or the use of more force than is reasonably necessary to accomplish the purpose, the proprietor incurs no liability beyond the price of admission."

RIGHT TO EJECT TRESPASSER

THE LAW is well established that any properly authorized employe of a theatre owner may eject from the property any trespassers or other persons who are on such premises without legal right. Generally speaking, in order to avoid liability for damages, it is necessary that the authorized employe first requests the intruder or trespasser to leave. Then, if the trespasser refuses to obey instructions as much force as is reasonably necessary may be exerted to eject him from the premises.

For instance, in People v. Heise (13 P. [2d] 796), it was shown that certain persons went upon property owned by a company. Employes of the company requested the trespassers to leave but they refused to do so. The employes utilized necessary force to remove the trespassers from the premises, and the latter arrested the employes on the charge of assault and battery.

However, under the circumstances, although the lower court held the employes liable the higher court reversed the verdict, and stated the following important law:

"As a general principle of law, it is clear that the use of force ordinarily would constitute a battery; but it is also well-established law that the owner of property has a legal right to eject trespassers therefrom, using such force in so doing as may be necessary to accomplish such purpose; and the rule holds good as to 'one who is lawfully in charge of the premises' for such owner."

MEMORIAL AS THEATRE ILLEGAL

CONSIDERABLE discussion has arisen from time to time whether or not city officials may lawfully lease a municipal building, such as a memorial, for conduction of a private business enterprise, as a motion picture theatre.

Generally speaking, city officials may enter into valid legal contracts leasing municipal buildings to theatre operators, providing the state statutes are not violated. However, if the courts may construe the state or city laws to mean that public buildings not intended for private enterprises, contracts of this nature are illegal.

For example, in the recent case of Glen W. Dickinson Theatres v. Lambert (16 P. [2d] 515), it was shown that to commemorate the valorous achievements of the citizens of the respective cities or counties who as soldiers, sailors and marines entered war service of the United States, bonds were issued for the erection of a building. A state law provides that the expense of the memorial should be paid out of the general fund of the city or out of a special fund obtained by taxation. Another state law provided that "the board of trustees shall have full authority to lease all or any part of said building for hire to any person or persons desiring to lease the same for a term not to exceed one year at a time and fix the rate and terms upon which the charge shall be made and collected therefor."

The board of trustees leased the theatre portion of the memorial to a theatre operator and received in payment thereof the sum of $35 a week rental.

Certain taxpayers and citizens filed suit contending that the contract is void because, according to logical interpretation of the above mentioned state laws, the memorial was not intended for use as a private enterprise and any contract of this nature made by the trustees is void. In upholding this contention, the court issued this opinion:

"The purpose of the statute was to give the people an opportunity to express in some substantial, tangible way their great appreciation of the patriotism of those who, by special service, gave so much in time, energy, and talent to our country in its time of need, and the Legislature was careful and provided in the statute that not only the cost of constructing the memorial, but the cost of its maintenance, even though special taxes for maintenance were necessary, should be borne by the public. The thoughts which prompted it were those opposite to those involved in commercial enterprise for gain."

EMPLOYE NOT ENTITLED TO DAMAGES

THE GENERAL rule of the law is that it is the duty of a theatre owner to exercise "ordinary care" to render the premises reasonably safe for his employes. However, the theatre owner is not an insurer as to the safe condition of the premises.

For illustration, in Anderson v. Chicago (241 N. W. 516), it was shown that a floor caved in as a result of excessive weight and the employe was seriously injured. Suit was filed against the employer by the injured employe to recover damages. Since it was shown that care was exercised by the employer in the construction and maintenance of the building, the court held the employe not entitled to a recovery, and said:

"The presumption then would be, in the absence of explanatory circumstances, that the floor fell because it was in an unsafe condition, and that the defendant was negligent in not exercising ordinary care in properly inspecting and keeping it in repair. In the instant case, the uncontradicted evidence tends to show sufficient care in construction and maintenance of the building."

LIABLE FOR LOSS OF INJURED PATRON'S BUSINESS

AS PREVIOUSLY indicated, a theatre owner is liable in full damages for an injury to a patron, where it is shown that such injury resulted from negligence of the theatre owner or his employes. Moreover, a patron may base a suit for damages upon actual loss resulting from the injuries sustained, and the jury may render a verdict in consideration of the loss of time, or loss of business, resulting from the injuries, if the loss claimed can be proved with reasonable certainty.

For instance, in Sizer v. Waterbury, (154 Atl. 639), it was disclosed that a patron fell into an unguarded hole and received serious physical injuries. The patron sued for damages and proved that the injury necessitated that he neglect his business. Moreover, he proved with reasonable certainty the amount of the loss from such neglect of the business.

The jury considered all of the testimony and rendered a judgment in favor of the injured person amounting to $5,000. Appeal was made to the higher court on the contention that the jury was not justified in allowing damages based upon loss of profits from neglect to a business, unless the injured person proved positively the exact loss. However, the higher court upheld the verdict rendered by the jury, and said:

"It would be incorrect to say that compensation for loss of plaintiff's business could not be given without proof in dollars and cents. Often such losses are not susceptible of such specific proof. The amount to be awarded in order to make just compensation often lies in the sound judgment of the jury, based upon such evidence as they have before them. It appears from the finding that there was evidence as to loss of the plaintiff's business, from which the jury could have determined the amount with reasonable certainty."

INJURY TO TENANT IN THEATRE BUILDING

ORDINARILY, in the absence of a clause in the lease, a theatre owner is not liable to a tenant who leases space in the building, for injuries due to the defective condition or faulty construction of the leased premises. Moreover, the theatre owner is not liable, for an injury sustained on the leased portion of the premises, although the injured tenant proves that by the exercise of reasonable care the theatre owner could have remedied the defective condition. In order to hold the theatre owner liable it must be proved that he knew of such defect.

On the other hand, where a portion of the premises is reserved by the theatre owner for use in common by himself and tenants, or by different tenants, the theatre owner is obligated to use ordinary care to keep those particular portions of the premises in a safe condition. If he is negligent in this regard, and a tenant is injured, he is liable therefor.

For example, in the recent case of Ellis v. McNees (293 Pac. 854), it was shown that a tenant fell and was seriously injured when a guard rail gave way. The tenant sued the owner of the building contending that he was negligent in failing to discover and repair the defective rail.

Since the part of the premises on which the injury was sustained was used exclusively by the tenant, although the lower court held the landlord liable, the higher court reversed this decision, and said:

"There is no evidence that other tenants used the stairway in question or that it was designed or intended to be used by tenants of other portions. . . . If the dedefendant (landlord) reserved the stairway involved in this case for the use of other tenants in common with the plaintiff, he thereby became bound to use ordinary care to keep it in a safe condition. . . . On the other hand, if there was no such reservation, then the defendant can be held liable only on proof of a hidden defect of which he had knowledge and which the injured tenant did not know."

MUST PATRONS BE PROTECTED?

By M. MARVIN BERGER

Member New York Bar

ARE YOU your brother's keeper? In practically any other line of business, no. As a theatre manager or owner, very often yes.

At the height of an evening performance, John Jones, very plainly under the influence of liquor, staggers up to the box office and demands a ticket in a boisterous and quarrelsome tone of voice. Your cashier sells him one, and Jones enters the theatre. In trying to reach a vacant seat Jones trips over the feet of Mrs. Smith. Jones swears at Mrs. Smith, and when she calls for an usher, he slaps her and knocks her down. Mrs. Smith sues you for the injury to her body and feelings caused by Jones' conduct, claiming that by the act of your agent, the cashier, in admitting Jones, you failed to use reasonable care to protect her from harm. Has Mrs. Smith a good case? The answer is, yes.

"All those who engage in a public business," said the Minnesota Supreme Court in a leading case, "are bound to protect their guests, both in person and property, from acts and misconduct of wrongdoers permitted to remain upon the premises."

Stated a bit more completely, the rule is that the owner of a place of public amusement is under a duty to protect his patrons from insults and violence at the hands of other patrons or employees. He must take all reasonable precautions to prevent such happenings of that kind, as he might be expected to foresee.

This rule, which is followed by practically all the courts in this country, is based on common sense. As the owner or agent of the owner of a theatre, you are not powerless to exclude or expel from your theatre a disorderly person, or a person who might very easily become disorderly. On the contrary, you have the absolute and unquestioned right to stop such a person from entering your theatre, and should he have entered and created, or attempted to create, a disturbance, you have the right to expel him. Having this power, you are under a duty to use it for the protection of your customers. By failing to use it you lay yourself open to the possibility of having to pay damages to an injured patron.

In making use of your power, it is of course better to stop an undesirable person from entering your theatre, rather than to attempt to put him out after he has gained admittance. Your cashiers, as the first line of defense, must exercise close surveillance over all those about to purchase tickets, and try to turn away those who seem likely to create trouble. In a case where the cashier cannot stop an undesirable from entering, she should communicate with the assistant manager or head usher, who will coax or threaten the undesirable into leaving, or, if necessary, have him bodily removed by the nearest policeman. It is hardly necessary to emphasize that the utmost tact should be used up to the point where force becomes necessary.

I am dealing here only with that class of undesirables who may cause injury to other patrons. Chief among that class are of course "drunks." But you may from your own experience know of other types of trouble makers, particularly individuals with a reputation for causing disturbances. In your treatment of them be guided by the thought that the price of an admission is never enough to pay for the damage an undesirable patron may do.

SOUND EQUIPMENT TODAY—AND ITS MARKET

By AARON NADELL

The first article of an analysis designed to interpret for theatre owner, manager and projectionist recent developments

In all the time since sound first came to the theatre, and until a very short while ago, the average manager's picture of the necessities and costs of sound operation did not change nearly as much as they have within the last few months. New oportunities for economy in both operation and maintenance, and for improved performance directly noticeable to the audience, have presented themselves almost overnight.

The conditions and terms upon which sound equipment of every make is obtainable have changed or are changing. In a number of highly significant instances contractual relations with manufacturers of sound equipment have become open to revision. The whole picture of sound operation is new—recreated during the last two or three months.

The alert showman owes it to himself and his patrons to survey this field anew. In many cases he may find that a radical change in his established practices with regard to sound is now altogether advisable. He may find new opportunities of which he wishes to take advantage. Or he may find he can still best serve his own interests, in spite of new oportunities, by continuing his existing policy without change. But he will agree that no decision relating to sound, though made only a few months ago, can economically be allowed to stand under present conditions without thorough re-examination.

Some part of the new picture is of course owing to various changes in the nature of circuit operation, and the freeing of many theatres from, as it were, their chains. But the larger part is due to alterations in the practices and policies of sound equipment manufacturers. In many cases the local exhibitor has recently acquired increased responsibility or has been entirely separated from group operation. He is now necessarily equipping himself with the technical knowledge for which, in many cases, he formerly relied upon experts in his home office. This technical knowledge, in turn, helps him to well-advised decisions which seem to have met, and also caused, drastic modification in the attitude of sound manufacturers.

Since it is not merely in one or two details that the picture of sound has changed, but in a whole series of interlocking, and often conflicting, opportunities, new offers and new possibilities, a mere list of the recent developments may not clarify the confusion they have brought with them. Such a list cannot in itself end the uncertainty many exhibitors feel as to which may be the best way to turn amid all these glittering new promises. The purpose of the present article and of observations to follow is to attempt to sort out the sometimes conflicting suggestions and to present the pros and cons of the more important of the new possibilities in such manner as may help each reader see the new picture of sound clearly from the standpoint of his own individual responsibilities.

In this article let us consider first the various phases of these developments worthy of our study.

Costs

In the broadest sense, the new developments offer the exhibitor the chance either to cut his costs of operation, or to improve the quality of his show. In some instances it will be possible to achieve both these desirable ends—not always, however, with maximum results in both. In other cases, a choice between them may be necessary.

Cost of sound operation revolves around three chief factors. These are: cost of maintenance labor (commonly discussed by exhibitors in terms of what is known as the service charge); cost of parts for replacement, renewal or repair, and amortization of the original investment in the equipment.

What is most likely to interest exhibitors immediately is that it is now in many cases possible to avoid fixed service charges which formerly seemed unalterable. (Some charge for maintenance labor, however, must always be necessary as long as equipment needs maintenance.) It is likewise sometimes possible now to merge service and parts charges into one whole, with a net saving. Lastly, the picture with regard to amortization can be changed.

But all these three things cannot be done in the same theatre, although all of them can be done by the same exhibitor if he owns a number of theatres. In the case of any one house, however, a choice must be made among them, and the nature of that choice will vary according to the bearing its details will have upon individual conditions. These details, as said, will be discussed in future articles of this series.

There is an additional factor which in some cases will bear heavily upon whatever decision may be reached. That factor is the present possibility of a distinctly noticeable improvement in sound quality.

Quality

Under the business and financial conditions of the present time some exhibitors may leap to the conclusion that possible improvements in quality are of very small importance compared with the chance of reducing costs, but observation of the current practices of the nation's largest industries does not seem wholly to bear out that point of view. To the contrary, the leaders of American business appear to be operating upon the principle that reduction in costs should be passed on to the public in the form of greater value rather than of lower prices.

How far that principle applies to show business is of course a matter each exhibitor must decide for himself, and which only the future can decide as regards the industry in general. Here it will be enough to call attention to the fact that railroads, for example, hard-hit as they have been, prefer to install air-conditioned trains and coaches that are as comfortable as Pullmans rather than reduce their fares, while the automobile industry in all price classes offers a greatly improved product at what is practically the same price as in 1929, in preference to the 1929 car at a lower price. As said, each showman must decide for himself whether or not the same principle will apply to show business; but at a time when conspicuous improvement in sound quality is offered simultaneously with an opportunity for important decreases in sound costs, the question would seem one that should have its due share of attention.

Improvements in quality that can be noticed by the audience, however, are still only half the story. Improvements in quality that make for greatly lower maintenance and replacement costs are also built into modern or modernized equipment, the selection of which therefore has a direct bearing on the matter of reducing operating costs as a whole.

Steps Open to the Exhibitor

NOW REGARDLESS for the moment of pros and cons, what steps are open to the exhibitor? What can he actually do? What are these new possibilities? Let us see:

First: One of the largest sound manufacturers not long ago offered to a group of theatres, known to this writer, a rearrangement of existing contractual relations whereby service charges and costs of parts and repairs would be merged in a new flat rate, very slightly larger than the existing service charge. This particular exhibitor refused the offer. But another exhibitor, controlling a different group of theatres, heard of the proposition and asked for it. There is obviously much room for difference of opinion as to the desirability of such a change, since one showman asked for it, and another, although it was offered to him, refused it. Considerations for and against, which may help each reader determine the applicability of such a proposition to his own problems, will be discussed later on. At this point it is enough to note that this is one possibility apparently open to at least some who may want it.

Second: A small group of theatres, known to the writer, engaged the services of a sound technician, arranged to have him buy parts and supplies in the open market wherever he thought he could do best, directed him to attend to all servicing and repairs himself.

Third: A still smaller group of theatres, too small to afford the services of a competent sound technician, retained the advice of a consulting sound engineer with exactly the same aims and intentions as the group mentioned above.

Fourth: Another exhibitor, among those known to the writer who have recently changed their sound operation, made no other attempt to reduce his sound costs than to authorize the manufacturer of his equipment to modernize it in every way.

Fifth: A great number of American theatres were wired for sound under contracts that contain a six-months cancellation clause. An exhibitor of the writer's acquaintance very recently invoked this clause and bought new equipment embodying all the latest improvements and carrying no contractual service charge. The difference between his new installment payments and his existing service charge seems to him so slight as to be altogether unimportant. He realizes that he will have to make arrangements of some sort to give the new equipment the expert attention it will need, especially at first, until his projectionists become familiar with it. But in spite of this additional expense, which must be counted in, he calculates that the new equipment will pay for itself in three years time, and thereafter show not only a complete saving of the service charge, but also substantial economies in supplies, parts and repairs. Other considerations, as will be explained later, also are factors.

Thus there are, as can be seen, at least five courses of new action open to the exhibitor at the present time, none of which in fact present the same picture they did a few months ago. But there are really more than five choices. Several of the steps mentioned above can not only be combined, but combined in a number of different ways. The fourth step, for example, can be joined with certain of the first three; or the first and third can be taken together if the third is confined solely to problems of modification. Step five need not be applied to all the theatres in one group (and in fact, in the case mentioned, it was planned to apply it progressively in order to reduce the immediate investment in down payments, other theatres of the group continuing to operate as in the second step).

Which, if any, of these changes any individual exhibitor may wish to make, or how he may wish to combine two or more of them in his sound policy, remain of necessity individual questions which can be determined satisfactorily only on the basis of local conditions. In a general discussion of them, however, an effort will be made to clarify some of the pertinent details most likely to bear important weight in any well-considered decision.

Mr. Nadell will continue his analysis of current factors importantly operating in the field of sound equipment, in the April 8th issue

EQUIPMENT AFFAIRS

General Equipment News and Comment

EMERGENCY LIGHTING

- A compact emergency lighting system, designed to meet the requirements of the average theatre both in power and cost, has been developed by the Electric Storage Battery Company of Philadelphia ("Exide"). In the same manner as the larger more expensive mechanisms, this model automatically goes into service when the regular supply of power is for some reason cut off.

This model, marketed under the trade name of "Keepalite," is a unit measuring 2 feet, 9 inches long, 10 inches deep and 16 inches high. It can be mounted on shelf or wall. It was developed specifically to meet the demand for assured source of electrical power by the motion picture theatre which may be regarded as incapable of supporting the cost of installing the larger more costly equipment.

CARBON SAVER

- Changes have been made in the carbon saver developed some time ago by the Golde Manufacturing Company of Chicago. To obtain a factor of more positive economy, this device has been redesigned in three sections, the main body of which has been given greater durability.

The taper-threaded ends are made in the form of replaceable tips to prevent accidental burning up of the carbon savers. Now the used carbon stub is twisted into the taper-threaded end and inserted into the lamp in place of the carbon. In case of accidental burning of a tip, this can be replaced without replacement of all three sections.

BY WAY OF NEWS

- The Chicago Cinema Equipment Company announces that Edward H. Wolk is no longer connected with that company.

H. M. Gassman has been appointed sales representative in the Birmingham, Ala., district for Coppus-Annis air filters, product of the Coppus Engineering Corporation of Worcester, Mass.

H. A. Seabright has been placed in charge of the office which Kendell & Dasseville, acoustic engineers, have opened in Columbus, Ohio, for service and maintenance of sound equipment.

The Noris Carbon Company, Inc., of New York, has named Jack O. Conway general sales manager. Mr. Conway was formerly with Warner Brothers and Paramount.

G. Harold Porter has been appointed vice president in charge of West Coast operations, for the RCA Victor Company.

NEW PROJECTION REGULATIONS IN CANADA

THE PROVINCE of Alberta in Western Canada has just adopted new laws governing theatres. The officials have done me the honor of sending me copies thereof, asking that I "check over that portion dealing with projection matters and express to them his candid opinion." This has been done. Aside from some few minor items, these laws are excellent. Some things I cannot commend enough.

For example, here is a statement of the subjects to be covered in examinations, with the remark that licenses are issued in three classes. To obtain a first-class license one must have held a second-class one in Alberta for one year, or its equivalent elsewhere, while a second-class license requires the prior holding of a third-class. Third-class men must have served some form of apprenticeship for one year as holder of an apprentice license in Alberta or elsewhere, or as a projectionist's assistant. (I don't think much of that last—too easy to side step.) An apprentice must be at least 18 years old and be vouched for by both the manager and the projectionists of the theatre where he served.

In examinations the following subjects are covered:

FIRST CLASS:

(a) Electrical—Systems of transmissions, sizes and insulation of wires and cables, theatre wiring systems.

General knowledge of generating, transforming and rectifying devices, transformers, rheostats and sound equipment, and the care of same.

Testing and tracing circuits for phase relationship, voltage, opens, shorts, grounds, etc., connection of lamp-circuits from source of supply through line resistance, motor-generator, rectifier, etc. The lamp-house, arc lamps, connections, faults, and their remedy.

(b) Mechanical—Specific knowledge of the machine parts, their uses, care, adjustment, and renewal of parts.

Various types of intermittent movements, their quality, care, and adjustment.

The machine safety devices, their action, care and adjustment.

The revolving shutter, its principle, and the application.

(c) Optical—Condensers, types, mountings, adjustments, focusing, mating, care, etc.

Projection-lenses, construction, selection, use, adjustment and care.

Ability to secure and maintain clear field on the screen, ability to secure correct definition, to properly mate and secure best results on screen at a minimum expense.

(d) Safety—Knowledge of safety appliances connected with projection machine apparatus, auxiliary safety appliances, their use and care, construction of projection rooms, installation of electrical and projection equipment therein, ventilation, etc.

SECOND CLASS:

(a) Electrical—Sizes and insulation of wires and cables, general knowledge of electrical and sound equipment used in motion picture work.

Testing for shorts, opens and grounds; testing of fuses.

Knowledge of wiring and connections from supply to lamp.

Knowledge of lamp-house, its care and faults, and the remedy.

(b) Mechanical—General knowledge of the machine head, its component parts, their adjustment and care, care of individual parts. Various types of intermittent movements, general knowldege of their qualities, care and adjustment.

Safety devices, their action and care and common faults.

Threading, framing and focusing devices, their use and care.

Revolving-shutter, its principle and use.

(c) Optical—Condensers, types, selection and care.

Projection-lenses, general knowledge of construction, selection, care and use.

Ability to secure correct definition and to maintain clear field on screen; ability to hold picture in focus and maintain maximum amount of light on screen.

(d) Safety—Knowledge of safety appliances connected with motion picture machines; auxiliary appliances, their use and care.

Construction of projection-rooms, installation of electrical and projection equipment, ventilation of rooms.

THIRD CLASS:

(a) Electrical—Wire sizes and insulations; systems of wiring as applied to motion picture work.

General knowledge of electrical devices used in projection practice and sound equipment.

Testing of circuits; fuses and arc lamps, connection of arc lamp from source of supply through line resistance, etc.

(b) Mechanical—General knowledge of the machine head.

Intermittent movements, their action and care.

Framing, threading, and focusing devices.

(c) Optical—Condensers, mating, use and care.

Projection-lenses, general knowledge of the construction, selection and care.

Ability to secure correct definition and to maintain even illumination of the screen.

(d) Safety—Safety appliances on projection machines, their use and action.

Auxiliary safety devices necessary.

Types of projection-rooms and projection equipment.

From this you may see, gentlemen, that Canadian governments believe in a real examination. They are not interested merely in fire prevention. They hold it right also to protect eyesight and to license only persons possessed of sufficient knowledge to enable them to give Canadian citizens full value for the money paid in at the box offices. The fee in Alberta is $10 for initial licenses and $5 each year for renewal, which charge I hold not unreasonable if a real, bona fide examination is given.

You who may contend the examination to be severe, take a look at what follows—Section (e), for example. Observe sections (m) and (n). Managers may read section (i) with benefit, though just what the word "defective" includes is not clear.

Restrictions and other rules follow:

The Chief Inspector of Theatres, appointed under the Act, shall have the right to revoke or suspend the license of any projectionist or apprentice projectionist for any of the following causes:

(a) Failure to produce, on demand by the proper official, the right class of license where motion picture equipment is being used.

(b) Permitting an unlicensed person other than the manager, or an authorized official or a licensed apprentice to be in the projection room while an audience is in the building.

(c) Operating or attempting to operate a motion picture machine while under the influence of intoxicating liquor.

(d) Smoking or permitting smoking in the projection room during a performance.

(e) Reading while operating a machine.

(f) Permitting an unlicensed person to operate the picture machine while a public performance or exhibition is being given.

(g) Lending a license to any other person to enable the latter to operate.

(h) Keeping or storing material of a combustible nature in the projection room.

(i) Operating a defective machine, or a machine not installed to the satisfaction of the inspector.

(j) Having more than one extra programme stored in the projection room at any time, or any film exposed, other than that in process of threading or running through the machine.

(k) Over-fusing or making improper electrical connection.

(l) Maintaining a dirty projection room.

(m) Latching the door of projection room or removing the handle therefrom or in any way delaying the accession of authorized persons.

(n) Projecting more than ninety feet of film per minute.

(o) Failure to report any film fire or defective machine.

(p) Making false statements in application for license.

The statute further provides that:

"It shall be the duty of every licensed projectionist at any theatre in the Province of Alberta at which motion pictures are shown, immediately upon the close of the run at any theatre of any film, to make up and sign in triplicate on a form, to be supplied by the Chief Inspector, a report showing (a) the name of the theatre, (b) the name of the film, (c) the print number, (d) the number of reels of the film, (e) the name of the person or company supplying the film, (f) the place from which the film was received, (g) the condition of the film when received, (h) the number of times run, (i) the condition of the film after the last run and any remarks the projectionist may think fit to make.

"The Theatre Manager shall send one such report by mail without delay to the Chief Inspector of Theatres, Government Buildings, Edmonton, shall send one report to the film exchange, and shall retain the third report at the theatre for reference.

"It shall be the duty of every proprietor or other person having the general control and management of any theatre to see that this regulation is complied with at all times.

"No film exchange shall distribute for exhibition any film which is, by reason of wear and tear, bad usage, defects in manufacture or otherwise, in such a condition that the showing thereof involves any increase in the ordinary risk of fire.

"Upon it being made to appear to the Chief Inspector by means of the report made pursuant to the regulations or otherwise that any film is, by reason of wear and tear, bad usage, defects in manufacture or otherwise, in such a condition that the showing thereof involves any increase in the ordinary risk of fire, the Chief Inspector may by telegraph or by notice in writing to both the exhibitor in whose hands such film then may be and the film exchange which is the distributor of such film, prohibit the further showing of such film, and thereupon the film shall be returned by the exhibitor to the film exchange and shall not be sent out for exhibition or be exhibited unless and until the same has been submitted to the Chief Inspector for examination and has been approved by him as being in a fit condition for exhibition.

"The Chief Inspector may at any reasonable time, upon demand, inspect any film in any theatre or film exchange and examine the same for the purpose of ascertaining the condition thereof and the Inspector may, after such examination, if in his discretion he deems that such film cannot be put into such a condition that it can be shown without an increase in the ordinary fire risk, by order in writing direct that such film be destroyed within thirty days unless the same is sooner sent out of the Province; and after the expiration of thirty days from the date of the said order no film exchange and no exhibitor shall have the custody, possession or control of any such film at any place within the Province whatsoever, so long as the said order remains in force; and in case any such film is found in the Province in contravention of this regulation the same shall be confiscated to His Majesty and may be seized by any inspector wherever found and shall thereafter be destroyed."

Mr. G. P. Barber is chief theatre inspector in Alberta. I think it likely the chief inspector is largely responsible for the Bureau of Labor (which department of the provincial government has theatre inspection, etc., under its jurisdiction), having secured the enactment of these most excellent regulations. The Bureau is fortunate in having such a progressive, livewire chief inspector.

THINGS BLAMED ON PROJECTIONISTS

FROM M. A. Smollin, projectionist at the Edwards theatre in East Hampton, New York, comes this interesting letter:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: The current consensus of opinion is that motion picture photography and the developed photograph printed on the film have both reached a very high stage of perfection, and that in consequence any fault appearing upon the screen is due either to carelessness or ignorance on the part of the theatre's projectionist.

"My object in addressing you is to show that the perfection is not so perfect as is generally supposed. For example, the changeover cue marks placed by swivel chair men are always in the right place—sometimes. As a matter of fact these highly important marks may be looked for almost anywhere. They may fall upon a black derby hat on the ornate hall tree. They may be exactly on the frame line or flush with the border.

Next let us consider the borders, which often are a prolific source of vexation to the projectionist. Every one will agree that few things in motion pictures are more objectionable than a fuzzy-edged screen image, yet we have them, and you know managers and the public automatically ascribe every visible fault on the screen or in the sound to the projectionist.

"With these observations as preliminary, examine attached film clippings taken from current prints. Can you spare space to print them and thus show their iniquities? A comparison discloses flagrant lack of uniformity. The pink specimen has no borders at all. In one the sprocket holes come over into the picture. Some have borders 1/16-inch wide.

"Attention is especially directed to the changeover cue marks. Note that without a change of scene, and without rhyme or reason, where they occur the border is quadrupled. Why? Surely those responsible can offer no excuse for thus outraging projection. Producers expect us to present their productions to the public at their maximum value, yet they apparently care nothing about working abuses of this sort upon us.

"Another matter which is not so good is the film photograph corners. Clearly three items must be considered in this matter; namely, the film photograph, the projector aperture outline, and the screen practical to have rounded corners, and with square corners the corners of the screen image will be fuzzy. The picture size must then be increased until the curved corners clear the squared corners of the masking, which means that light is lost and an objectionable illumination falls upon the masking. Save in rare instances the film photograph corners are rounded.

"Those using and favorable to the round-cornered screen image should consider the fact that although the round cornered photograph does not work well with square cornered projector aperture and screen masking, square cornered film photographs work well under any conditions found in projection.

"I for one wish to recommend to the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences the rectification of these various objectionable faults, to the end that we be enabled to lay the finished product of the industry before the public, which is its buyer, to better advantage. I also ask that you exert your own influence toward this end."

"In closing, I extend to you my most hearty congratulations for the ceaseless war you have waged, mostly alone, against faults affecting projection, no matter on which side they may be found."

I am willing to back up Friend Smollin's demand for uniformity of borders, changeover marks, corners, etc. I would first prefer to hear from other projectionists as to the "corner" suggestion. Certainly the samples submitted show all the faults ascribed to them, and these faults are without legitimate excuse. It is very true that picture borders reach us in a sort of now-we-see-it-and-now-we-don't plan. Surely there can be no real reason why the outline of every film photograph cannot be exactly the same as every other one in all productions. Even newsreels can have that grace, or if they cannot I would be glad to know the reason why. It seems to me to be merely a standardization of all camera and printer apertures. Just why must we have this constant variation? Of course if the projector aperture always eliminated all the border, it would not matter. The fact is, however, that projector apertures do not always do so, with the result that a totally unnecessary fault appears upon the screen.

What Friend Smollin says about standard placement, of change-over marks is entirely correct. There is and can be no legitimate reason why they cannot always be placed in at least approximately exactly the same place.

FILM FAULTS— STILL THEY COME

PAUL A. SHAFER, projectionist of Petersburg, Ind., forwards certain film samples and says, "In a recent issue of Better Theatres I noticed in your department that some projectionist had sent you sample of film in which dirt was apparently photographed at the frame line edges.

"This has happened quite often with me. I hand you herewith a sample of film in which it occurs. I also include examples of another trouble I have had handed me on several occasions. Note the small holes in the sound band; sometimes only one, and again several, one or more a frame or two apart. You may imagine the effect when these pass over the sound aperture, especially when they happen to occur in a quiet scene."

Indeed, I can, Friend Shafer. One sample has what seems to be a scratch mark in curved form, perhaps 1/32-inch wide and ¼-inch long. Gosh all fishooks, what an explosion when that thing passes through the sound gate! I'm wondering if it may not be a new changeover mark some real smart machine operator may have invented for himself. If so, he'll never miss the change—nor will the audience.

In the other sample some genius has evidently clamped a dirty finger or thumb, well lubricated with film cement, on about half an inch of the sound track. Also, there is a tiny photographic pin-hole, though I think it is so very small that the effect would not be very bad.

As to the finger mark, all I can say is that it is on the non-emulsion side and should have been found and cleaned off by the exchange inspector.

As to the framing line dirt, it is not, in all human probability, chargeable to the cinematographer, but to carelessness on the part of those who printed the positives. This fault certainly occurs entirely too frequently. I am transmitting the samples to the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

GENERATOR CLOSE TO SOUND APPARATUS

THOMAS D. RISLEY of St. Louis, Mo., writes, "I am one of your thousands of 'fans', having followed your department and books for years. Yesterday I had an argument and concluded to ask your opinion.

"I visited a St. Louis projection room where the motor-generator set was located not far from a part of the sound equipment. The projectionist complained that there was ground noise he could find no cause for.

"Examining various things I discovered some sparking at the generator commutator. Not bad, but quite a little at that. I told him that was probably what was the trouble, but he laughed at me. Because I am a projectionist in a small town theatre he would not listen to me. He said I was full of baloney and that I should not come trying to tell city men what to do.

"Perhaps I am wrong, Mr. Richardson, but I have studied. I have your books and Nadell's sound book. I answer every Bluebook School question, or try to. I believe I am right, but would like your opinion."

Yes, Friend Risley, you are correct in supposing the trouble could have come from the generator commutator if it was visibly sparking close to sound apparatus. It might even by responsible for the trouble if there was no visible sparking. There is always sparking between commutators and brushes if the machine is carrying anything near its normal load, though the said sparking may be invisible to the eye, even in darkness. It may be concealed under the race of the brush. It is possible the machine was over-loaded. If it was, there would be sparking almost inevitably, regardless of commutator conditions.

As to small town projectionists presuming to tell city men things, it is my observation that many small town projectionists are possessed of ability superior to that of many city men and there is a reason. The city man as a rule has plenty of available help when things go wrong, and plenty of chances to "talk things over" with other men and thus learn, though not always correctly. The small town man is usually thrown absolutely upon his own resources. He must keep the little show going, and to do that requires just about as much basic knowledge as is required in the large city house. He therefore is compelled to study not only his equipment, but the underlying principles through which it operates. I personally know of many small town projectionists who could give a large percentage of city men a considerable handicap and beat them to it, except in the matter of handling complicated equipment. In that they have of course had no experience, but they put on a good show with equipment the city man could do very little with, so the count is even.

Incidentally, motor-generator sets should not be located too close to sound equipment. If they are, every care should be used to reduce brush sparking to the lowest possible limit. The sound equipment may or may not pick it up, but there is always the chance it will.

HOW MUCH HUM? WHAT CAUSES IT?

SAM A. LURVEY, projectionist at the Park theatre in Southwest Harbor, Me., asks, "How much hum should a healthy loudspeaker have when the current to the amplifiers and speakers is turned on but the exciter lamp circuit is left dead? Aside from the tubes themselves, what will cause a loud hum? Manager says hum can be heard while show is running. Loud speaker has no name on it.

It is unwise to purchase equipment such as speakers which does not carry the name of the maker and proper designating marks. If the maker has not sufficient confidence in his own equipment to affix his name thereto, surely others cannot be expected to think highly of it.

No equipment, of course, should create hum perceptible to audiences while the show is in progress, or at other time for that matter. Audible hum while the show is running is unthinkable. That is the only answer to the how-much-hum question.

Without much more exact knowledge of the equipment and its general layout, including circuits, it would be impossible to diagnose the trouble with any degree of accuracy. However, it is very possible, or even probable the trouble is due to pick-up

PHOTOTONE TALKAFILM

HAS PERFECT LIGHTGATE

AC Sound-on-Film Amplification and complete Sound Heads as low as $350.00

To pay you a quick profit on your investment Phototone Talkafilm has twenty-three unique improvements. One of them is the perfect lightgate. Every part of it is machined to the thousandth part of an inch. Perfect tracking and light penetration are assured by this fine precision. The film simply cannot flap between the lightgate and the sound sprocket, which runs in full-floating ball bearings. The film is held at constant tension upon the aperture plate. The plate itself is oil hardened tool steel, giving it a surface that a million miles of film will not wear out, and that does not wear film. Ask your projectionist how this feature makes money for you and remember it is only one improvement among twenty-three moneymakers. Write for details.

of alternating current. The most likely sources of such trouble are pick-up from a.c. lighting or power circuits by p.e. cell; a 60-cycle, 110-volt light bulb or its circuit, and even the a.c. street mains, if close enough. The remedy is to have the system shielded at the point or points where the trouble occurs.

Inductive pick-up due to the location of head amplifier wiring in too close proximity to a 60-cycle a.c. magnetic field is another cause. Such trouble may come from unshielded a.c. circuits to motors, framing lights, or from lamphouse circuits if a.c. is used at the lamps. This also applies to high current circuits leading to arc lamps, either a.c. or d.c.

The trouble may be caused by two rectifier circuits (two 43 or other amplifiers) connected in parallel, with their 110-volt supplies coming from 2-phase service, the resultant hum in the output of each amplifier being, of course, 120° out of phase.

There are other possible minor causes of such hum, but they mostly all have their seat in pick-up.

VARIATIONS IN BORDERS PROTESTED

M. A. SMOLLIN, projectionist at the Edwards theatre in East Hampton, N. Y., enters vigorous protest against the wide variety of borders now used, and also against the misplacement of changeover marks.

He is entirely right as to the changeover marks. They should be not only of standard form and dimensions, but should also appear at approximately the same place each time. Smollin says, "Sometimes they fall upon a black derby hat on an ornate hat tree. They may be exactly on a frame line or flush with the border."

Personally, I have not seen changeover marks thus badly misplaced. If they are, it is a very bad condition and may offer machine operators an excuse—a poor one, but nevertheless something they can use for an excuse for affixing their own changeover marks.

However, if the marks are placed in approximately one position, as they should be, it follows that they may appear on whatever object may happen to hold that position in the photograph. That is obvious. It just cannot be helped.

As to the borders, it apparently is one of the results of changing the projector and camera aperture form. I think Friend Smollin must be using old style apertures. I have talked with several very able projectionists, who agree with me that the heavy borders will not show much, if at all, if new style apertures are used. I would strongly advise all projectionists who have not already equipped their projectors with the new style apertures to do so at once.

NEW LIGHT SOURCE: A TWO-WICK LAMP!

THOMAS MILLIGAN of Parry Sound, Ont., a youngster of merely 50 years' experience in shadow-shooting, writes, "I was glad to read your reminiscences of old days in BETTER THEATRES February 11th issue. You say it was some 20 years since you began projecting pictures [27 years.—F.H.R.]. Well, I can look back a bit more than 50 years when first I began projecting, using the old magic lantern with a two-wick lamp. Temperance lectures, 'Ten Nights in a Barroom,' and illustrated songs! When the new four-wick lamp came along, oh boy! That was certainly the end. There would never be a better light than that! Next came gas bags, for which we made our own gas. Then the gas tanks, and then—oh, well, everyone knows the path of advancement after that.

"I used a Powers-5 up to a few years ago, but at 76 I have to take things a bit easy, so I'm back to the old lantern again, working just around our home place. Just can't give up projecting. Can you tell me where I can purchase a few sets of the old song slides, 'Silver Threads Among the Gold,' for example?"

Have any of you older chaps anything of the kind? If so please write Friend Milligan. I think I have one set up at my summer place, but am not sure. I will look when I go up next spring.

My own first projecting was with a gas bag stereopticon—a MacIntosh metal affair. That was advertising work in the Cripple Creek district in Colorado, about 1890. I have not counted that as part of my projection experience. If I did I would be able to date back about 43 years myself!

SOME HANDY INFORMATION

JOHN RATHBURN of Weiser, Idaho, asks, "Will you be good enough to advise me as to the relation of weight in iron and brass; also of lead, if you will."

I had quite a job finding this particular piece of dope. In searching for it I ran across some other data which I shall publish, as it will be handy to have.

The weight of iron being taken as 12, the weight of brass would be 13, the weight of lead 19, of zinc 11.4 and of tin 12.2. When I finally found what you asked for, the others were right there beside them. Here they are:

Feet times .00019 equals miles.
Yards times .0006 equals miles.
Square inches times .00546 equals square feet.
Square feet times 111 equals square yards.
Cubic feet times .04 equals cubic yards.
Cubic inches times .00058 equals cubic feet.
Cubic feet times .8036 equals U. S. bushels.
U. S. gallons times 231 equals cubic inches.
Cubic feet of water times 62.5 equals pounds.
Meters times 3.281 equals feet.

The following weights, in pounds, apply per cubic foot: silver, 654; steel, 490; nickel, 561; lead, 712; mercury, 849; platinum, 1,342; tin, 462; zinc, 428; brass, 530; aluminum, 162; bronze, 530; copper, 542; gold, 720; iron (wrought), 480; iron (cast), 450.

Freezing point on Fahrenheit scale is +32; boiling point 212. On Centigrade scale, freezing, 0; boiling, 100. Reaumer scale, freezing, 0; boiling, 80.

RECTIFYING TUBES AND HOW THEY WORK

JOHN LAMBERT of Unionville, Mo., asks, "Will you please explain, in simple terms, just how a vacuum tube rectifies a.c. into d.c.? I have tried to understand the matter from reading standard text books, but seem unable to—very clearly, at least."

The matter is not hard to understand, but standard text books often are quite hard to understand. Somewhere around the year 1875, in making experiments with incandescent lamps, Thomas A. Edison discovered something since known as the "Edison effect," which amounts to this: If a negatively charged metal plate and a positively charged heated filament be mounted on a vacuum tube quite close together, with an element charged with a.c. voltage between, none of the three in contact with each other, during one-half of each cycle, current will flow through any closed circuit connected with the plate, but during the remaining half-cycle, when the impulse is in the opposite direction, no current will flow.

This of course transforms a tube so equipped and connected into an electric valve which will pass current only when the electrical impulse is in one certain direction. Such a tube can of course pass only half the electric power impressed upon it, but since there is no flow during the other half cycle, there is no waste.

Briefly, the reason for this condition is found in the following facts: All substance is now held by scientists to be composed in a certain arrangement with other components, of electric particles, termed "electrons." These particles are in violent motion at all times, but the violence of motion increases as the temperature is increased. When the temperature is high enough they will fly off and may either be attracted by opposite polarity or may return to the substance they just left.

That, briefly, is how and why vacuum tubes rectify a.c. current into d.c. There is, of course, a lot more details I could set forth, but they would only serve to confuse you, Friend Lambert.

HOW TO CUT MORE LINES OF FORCE

THOMAS L. BRADY, Portland, Me., says, "May I ask a question. I had an argument recently. I was told the power of a motor could be increased by causing it to cut more lines of magnetic force. My question is, how can that be done?"

Well, Friend Brady, you probably would have a hard time causing a motor to cut more lines of magnetic force, though you might cause some of its elements to do so. There are two possible ways; namely, to increase the speed of its rotating element, or to increase the density of its field.

I would have to have details of the particular motor under consideration before deciding whether either of these things could be done.

ARE YOU IN THE MOTION PICTURE THEATRE MARKET?

If you are, do you fully appreciate the possibilities of that market? Over 557 theatres opened their doors to the public in one 60-day period of 1932. That meant a thousand projection machines, a half million chairs, several acres of carpet, a tank car full of paint, enough wire to make a planet's belt . . . and hundreds of other items in similar volume. How much of this business did you get? If you were keeping the industry fully informed of your products—advertising consistently in BETTER THEATRES—you got most of it. If you were not an advertiser, you didn't get as much as you might have, if any. Judicious, courageous advertising still pays. In spite of general conditions, BETTER THEATRES advertisers still sell goods in this great market.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

The Question:

FOR THE LAST several years it has been my ambition to build and own my own theatre, and now that I am in a position to carry out my dream I seem to lose my nerve to enter into this enterprise at the present time under such unfavorable conditions. I hear that the show business all over the country is not so good, and if I only knew when it would pick up again or that there would be possibilities that it would get better before long, I would not hesitate at all. But sometimes I feel that the movies may not come back to where the business was before the decline came. Still I am of the opinion that the legitimate show business will come back again into its own.

The reason I am telling you all these thoughts of mine is that if I go ahead with my plans of building my theatre, whether I should build simply a movie house with a platform for the screen or build a complete stage, so that if either business picks up I will be all set in either case. Does it cost a great deal more to add a full stage with dressing rooms to the auditorium than just providing a platform for the screen? I have the lot, and of course it is not bringing me any income and I doubt if I can sell it without a great loss.

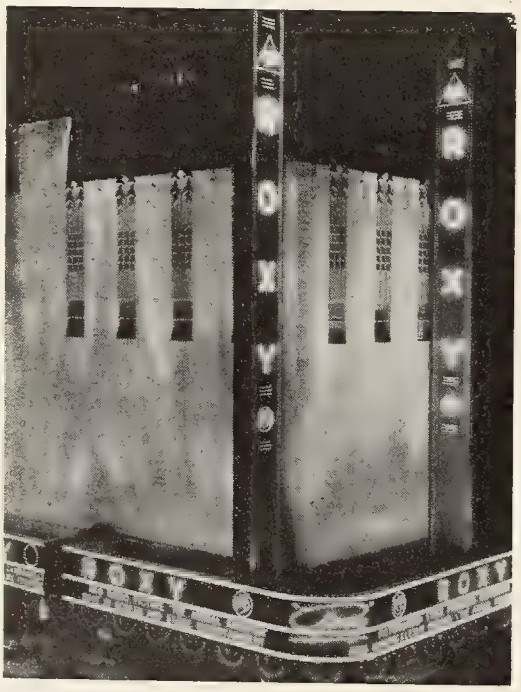
The lot is 65 feet wide and 165 feet deep and has an alley in the rear and one on the side. My intentions are to build a 1,000-seat auditorium, 700 downstairs and 300 in the balcony. Do you think I could build such a theatre with a 25-foot stage for $65,000.00?

I want two small store rooms on each side of the entrance lobby, but do not care for any rental space on the second floor. Still I would like to build the front up so that it will look like a large building and to get away from the one-story effect. Is my lot large enough for such a theatre?

I know I have been troubling you long enough with my questions, but you can rest assured that your answer will put my mind at ease and at least make me decide what to do. For this I will appreciate very much your answer.—A. M. C.

The Answer:

I WISH I could give you a definite answer to your inquiry, especially as to when business is going to pick up. If I could foretell that I believe that my own troubles and worries would come to an end. But of course you know that such a great industry as that of the motion picture is bound to come back. It is only a matter of time. When people get back to work and credit gets readjusted that time will come.



EXTERIOR AT NIGHT
RKO ROXY THEATRE
NEW YORK CITY

We all know that the cost of building is as low now as it ever will get, and if you are financially able to carry out your desire, and provided there is not much competition in your city and your town is not over-seated I would not hesitate to go ahead. By the time your new house is completed times may have changed for the better. A great deal of the future business depends on the diversified industries which may exist in your city. Why not make a canvass yourself of your local conditions to find out whether your people can support such a motion picture theatre as you have in mind.

I suggest that you plan a stage, or at least leave space for a stage at the rear of the lot and construct the rear wall so that at any time in the future you may be able to cut an opening in that wall for a proscenium arch and a stage, in case you think it safer to wait until stage plays or vaudeville come back again. A stage of the size you require would cost about $16,000. Of course this cost would be greatly increased if you should build the stage after the building has been completed. That is why I advise providing space now so that you will be prepared to meet conditions as they come.

The size of your lot is all right for the seating capacity you mention. The stores on each side of the lobby could be about 30 feet deep. You could build the balcony and projection room over the stores, lobby and foyer. This would increase the height of the front wall sufficiently to make a good-looking front elevation, and the cost of the balcony construction would be greatly reduced since the large girders for clear-span construction would be eliminated because the balcony could be supported by columns placed in the walls between the stores and the lobby. By careful planning I think that $65,000.00 would be sufficient for building a very nice theatre with stage included. However, I doubt that this amount could include all the necessary equipment.

To really determine how much the equipment would add to the total cost of the theatre, you might make out a list of the items of equipment you would require, and then consult with a representative of one of the theatre equipment distributors as to kinds and costs.

A GOOD WHITE PAINT reflects about 80 per cent of the light falling on it and a dirty black surface reflects only a few per cent. In the case of attraction—letter signs, perhaps 25% of the light from the lamps goes directly to the sign letter; the rest goes to the box and is absorbed, or reflected so as to be useful. If the inside surfaces are a good white, the attraction letters may be two or three times as bright as when the interior is dark or dirty. In many cases, sign manufacturers have left these inner surfaces unpainted. Clean and paint the interiors of the enclosed signs at once and they will be brighter with less wattage and will look better.

Channels of signs, interior coves and niches, interior signs and stage equipment—all can be made to show a contribution to vital economy through the use of a little paint.

Cleaning, too, shows results. The glass of the fixtures may originally have allowed 70% of the light to pass through, but because of dirty glass and dirty lamps now allows but 35% or less. A little soap and water corrects this.

Opal glass letters may absorb twice as much light as they should and may acquire an almost unremovable coating of dirt.

Group Replacement

In some cases, such as in some coves, lamps are inaccessible and difficult and expensive to replace. Special equipment may even be required to allow access to the parts in question. A study of these locations may lead to the practical solution of "group replacement."

By this method all lamps in the inaccessible places that are expensive to reach are replaced at one time. The time cost is not much greater than that required to replace two or three lamps. It will not then be necessary to go back to this place until perhaps 500 hours of burning has elapsed, when lamp outages become too noticeable. After several more trips to replace lamps, another complete replacement should be made.

The lamps which are removed may be used in other more accessible locations. Even discarding them would be a saving over the present system, because lamps that have burned 700 or 800 hours have not much life left in them and are trouble-makers. Some will be lost in the replacement, but this will eliminate lamps that are ready to burn out. Others that are too black or show great deterioration should be discarded.

A test of this plan is convincing. First, keep an accurate record of the cost of lamps and replacement in a difficult location. Then replace all lamps and check the costs until a second complete replacement is made.

A Theatre Architect Visits Europe

hoops over canes, roll balls into numbered boxes, etc., but there is one very outstanding concession that is composed of a game in which you throw a baseball at a target. The girl who sells the baseball is dressed as a maid, and behind the maid is a very beautiful girl lying upon a couch. If you hit the target with a baseball, one side of the couch is thrown up and the girl falls off. Whether it is part of the ordinary performance or not, this particular night she forgot her nightgown!

On the way out of every cafe you are always hounded to death with postcard salesmen. Many other salesmen also hang around the lobbies of the night clubs, both male and female.

There are other places of entertainment in Paris which I would be glad to discuss with you, gentle reader, but I must refuse to send a description of them through Uncle Sam's mail.

IT TAKES an outstanding sense of humor to get a laugh out of the trains in Europe. The trains are divided into compartments with an aisle along the side. Eight people are supposed to occupy a compartment. However, it seems that children are not counted, and the compartments are hung with hammocks in which dripping babies are stored while the fond parents cook their food on a Sterno heater in the middle of the floor. All of the trains are overcrowded, not because the traffic is so heavy, but because the trains run on too light a schedule, one train running where there should be four. People stand in the aisles, and if you do not have the good fortune to start at the beginning of a train's run you never do get a chance to sit down.

The dining car works a system of seating in turn and serves a standard menu. They pass the food around as they would at a boarding house, and you either eat what they have on the menu or try and grab yourself a loaf of bread and a bottle of wine at one of the stations.

Sleeping car accommodations are very expensive, so most of the people travel in day coaches, sitting up the whole duration of their journey. Sleeping cars are made in separate compartments, and in some countries they have built new cars of the second class. If you are wise to this equipment and buy a second-class ticket, you get better accommodations than you would by buying a first-class ticket. The difference between the first- and second-class day coach lies only in the fact that the first-class has a doily on the back of the seat. There is only one lavatory on a car for both sexes, and a roller-towel is provided, sometimes.

Italy does not seem to boast of many motion picture houses. In fact, they are a scarcity in Rome, the capital city, and then they are only alterations of existing properties.

The most unique theatre I have ever seen was in Venice, where a church had been transformed into a motion picture theatre. All of the statuary, crosses and other symbols had been left. A statue with an outstretched hand stood alongside the entrance; this hand held a three-sheet. The box office was built in the center of the entrance and was reached by going up a flight of about twenty steps. No changes were made in the auditorium, the floor being level and the projection machines were exposed.

Another interesting theatre in Venice was built along one of the canals. You arrived at the entrance in a gondola, and in case of a fire, if you couldn't swim, you could take your choice between burning or drowning.

Italy, of course, has a mild climate and their outdoor activity may be the cause of their apparent lack of show business.

[And leaving Italy, Mr. Lee turns northward again, and in the final installment in the next issue of Better Theatres, he will reveal some theatrical oddities of the Germanic countries, as well as make some timely observations on European theatre design in general.]

sidewalk adjacent a theatre, the important consideration of a court is whether the sidewalk was known by the theatre owner to be defective, or whether he was negligent in discovering the defect.

For illustration, in Mathews v. City of La Grande (299 Pac. 999), it was shown that a pedestrian was seriously injured when his foot became caught in a defective sidewalk causing him to fall. He sued to recover damages and proved that the condition of the sidewalk had been defective for a long period of time. After considering all testimony the jury received instructions from the lower court as follows:

"If you find from the evidence that the section of the sidewalk in question, at the time of the alleged injury, was not reasonably safe for public travel, and the plaintiff (pedestrian) in passing over the same was injured, and that said dangerous condition of the sidewalk, if any, proximately caused or contributed to the fall and injury of the plaintiff, and that the defect had existed for a sufficient length of time, and should have been discovered and remedied, and that plaintiff (pedestrian) in passing over said section of sidewalk used the ordinary care and prudence of a reasonably prudent man under the circumstances, then you should find for the plaintiff (pedestrian)."

The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the pedestrian for damages and the case was appealed to the higher court which sustained the jury's verdict, and said:

"It is hornbook law that the court's instructions are to be read and considered as a whole, and, if found correct to such a degree that they fully and fairly present the matters at issue to the jury, the verdict of the jury based thereon and on the evidence in the case will not be disturbed."

Employer Not Liable for Injuries Effected by Competitors

MANY COURTS have held that a theatre owner is not liable in damages for injuries effected by an employe, unless the evidence clearly indicates that such employee was acting within the scope of the general employment, or upon instruction from the theatre owner, at the time the injury was inflicted. Therefore, this rule of the law is applicable with respect to employes who effect injuries by instructions of a manager. This point of the law was clearly discussed by the higher court in the recent case of Morin v. People's Company (156 Atl. 499).

The facts of this case are that a manager directed an employe to use forceful methods and fight if necessary with respect to employes of competitors. One day an employe seriously injured the employe of a competitor. The injured employe filed suit against the employer whose manager had issued the above mentioned instructions.

However, no testimony was introduced showing that the employer had instructed the manager to issue such instructions to the employes. Therefore, the higher court held the employer not liable for the acts committed by the employe, and stated the following important law:

"The manager had no implied authority to give directions, or even permission, for conduct that any one would know was wrongful. . . . While the servant's conduct took place in the course of his service, it was outside its scope. . . . The manager had no more authority to direct the commission of the wrong than the servant had to commit it."

Liable on Film Contract

IT IS QUITE apparent that a person who enters into a valid contract is bound to fulfill all obligations, otherwise financial loss, as damages, will result. For instance, a theatre owner who makes a valid contract to exhibit motion picture films is bound to pay either damages or the full rental price specified in the contract, although he sells the theatre and is unable to fulfill his obligations of the contract.

For example, in the leading case of Mayer vs. Cocke (41 S. W. [2d] 645), it was shown that a motion picture theatre owner and a film distributor made a contract by which the theatre owner agreed to accept and pay a specified amount for exhibiting certain motion picture films on specified dates. The agreement provided if the theatre owner "sells or disposes of his interest in the theatre he may assign this contract to the purchaser, such

Contract Must Be Definite

THE COURTS have consistently held that a valid contract is not completed if it is shown that either party failed to accept an offer presented by the other party. In other words, a valid contract is made only by parties whose minds have met regarding their obligations.

For instance, in Consolidated Amusement Company v. Momand (14 P. [2d] 359), it was shown that certain letters and telegrams passed between a theatre operator named Momand and an amusement company engaged in contracting engagements for different shows with showhouses. While operating its usual business, the company received a letter from Momand in reference to furnishing certain of the latter's showhouses with an attraction under the title of "Josephine Barlow Revue." The only question presented for litigation was whether or not the telegrams and letters that passed between Momand and the amusement company constituted a contract that was binding on Momand for an exhibition that was concluded at a theatre in Bartlesville.

It was proved that the theatre owner sent to the amusement company a telegram as follows: "Consolidated Amusement Company, 146 Lee Bldg., Kansas City, Mo. O. K. Pawhuska positively commencing matinee Sunday week Nov. fifteenth Bartlesville week Nov. twenty-second Shawnee option additional good time. A. B. Momand."

The amusement company sent a letter in answer to this telegram, expressing uncertainty whether Momand owned all of the mentioned theatres in the different towns. A portion of the letter stated: "Also advise if you control the house in Pawhuska and in Bartlesville, or shall we send contracts direct to those towns?"

Momand, in answer to the above inquiry, said: "Replying to your letter dated November 5, we own the Jackson Theatre in Pawhuska, but book the Liberty Theatre in Bartlesville on arrangement with the owner, Miss B. L. Cutler."

The amusement company made a contract with the owner of the Bartlesville theatre for its attraction, "Josephine Barlow Revue," and the later sued Momand to recover payment. It was contended by the counsel for the amusement company that the above mentioned telegrams and letters constituted a contract by which Momand assumed responsibility for payment of the Revue shown at the Bartlesville theatre, which actually was owned by another. However, the court refused to hold Momand liable, saying:

"It appears that when the plaintiff (amusement company) inquired of the defendant (Momand) if he controlled the showhouse at Bartlesville, and Momand replied that the plaintiff would make arrangements with the owner there, it was notice to the plaintiff (amusement company) that they should conduct their contractual relation for the booking of the show with the owner of the showhouse at Bartlesville. In our judgment, the telegrams and correspondence between the plaintiff and defendant were not sufficient to show a contract that was binding upon the defendant for the payment of the exhibition that was shown at Bartlesville."

What Is "Doing Business?"

IT IS important to know that various states have enacted laws which require foreign corporations which transact intrastate business to perform certain duties, such as payment of license fees, or filing of certain papers or certificates with named officials of the state.

Generally speaking, a foreign corporation which transacts interstate business is not required to abide by state laws of this nature. However, where the transaction is intrastate and the foreign corporation fails to comply with laws of the state, such corporation is not entitled to file suit to collect money owed by residents of such state. The latest higher court case involving this point of the law is General Talking Pictures Corporation v. Shea (49 S. W. [2d] 359).

In this case it was shown that a seller located in New York state made an agreement in New York leasing a picture machine to the owner of a theatre operated in Arkansas. The lease contract provided that the seller should install, inspect and repair the machine.

Later it was contended by the theatre owner that a contract of this nature is intrastate and, since the seller had not complied with laws of the state of Arkansas, it was not entitled to file suit on the contract. However, the court held:

"The character of the transaction as to whether interstate or intrastate is necessarily determined by the essence of the contract. The essence of the instant contract was the renting or leasing of a picture machine in New York for shipment to McGehee, Arkansas. The agreement was entered into in New York. It was clearly an agreement for an interstate shipment and must be classed as interstate commerce unless that portion of the contract providing for installation, inspection and repairs renders the transaction intrastate. The decided weight of authority is to the effect that an agreement to install machinery or other apparatus at the point of destination will not divest the sale of its character of interstate commerce."

Payment for Extra Work

A CONTRACTOR, or other employe, is entitled to recover extra payment for extra work performed on a theatre building, where it is shown that such work was performed by the contractor by authority of the theatre owner and such extra work was not provided for in the specifications submitted by the owner to the contractor at the time the contract was made.

For instance, in Theatre Realty Company v. P. H. Meyer Company (48 S. W. [2d] 1), it was shown that a theatre owner and a contractor entered into a construction contract. Litigation arose when the contractor contended that he was entitled to recover extra payment for constructing certain attachments at the rear of the stage of the theatre. The contractor sued the theatre owner to recover extra payment and proved that the attachments were not referred to in the original specifications presented to him when the contract was made. In view of this fact the higher court held the contractor entitled to a recovery, and said:

"In other words, the person who accepts a contract is not bound beyond the fair meaning of the writing which he accepts. A careful consideration of the papers submitted to Meyer (contractor), which itemized the work which he was to do, satisfied the court that this standpipe back of the wall in the rear of the stage was not included in the specifications which were submitted to him."

Liability for False Arrest

A THEATRE OWNER is liable in damages where his authorized agent causes false arrest of any person. This point of the law was discussed in the recent case of Waddington v. Mutual Protective Association (163 S. E. 313).

The facts of this case are that a person was detained and questioned by a police officer. Later it was determined that the questioned person was innocent. He filed suit against the police officer's employer. Under the circumstances the higher court held the employer liable, and said:

"In a suit against the corporation by the person arrested to recover damages for his false and illegal imprisonment, which was made without lawful warrant, the evidence was sufficient to authorize a finding for the plaintiff."

Contracts Not to Engage in Competitive Business

THE GENERAL rule is that a valid contract by a seller of a theatre not to engage in competition must be ancillary and incidental to the main purpose of the transfer of the business sold, and made in protection or support of the business transferred. On the other hand, it is held that a contract of this nature is automatically assignable.

For example, in Burchell v. Capitol (163 S. E. 81), it was shown that the seller of his business entered into a contract with the purchaser by the terms of which he agreed that he would not, directly or indirectly, engage in the same business in or within fifty miles of the city for a period of ten years.

Later this purchaser sold the business to another purchaser. Legal controversy arose over the question whether or not the last purchaser had legal right to file suit and obtain an injunction against the first owner from entering into competitive business since the latter had not contracted with the last purchaser.

In holding that a restrictive clause of this nature is automatically assignable to the purchaser of the business, this court said:

"Such a covenant is assignable by the purchaser of the business, even though it does not run to the purchaser and his assigns; and, if the purchaser in turn sells the business, including his good will, the covenant passes as an appurtenance of, or an incident to, the business sold by the purchaser without a specific assignment thereof, or of the contract in which it was made."

Almost all state courts have consistently held that an agreement is valid and binding by which an employe agrees not to enter into competing business with his employer in a small area of territory, such as a county, for a reasonable period of time, say five years. However, the higher court in Massachusetts adopted a different rule.

For illustration, in Whiting v. O'Connell (179 N. E. 169), it was disclosed that an employe contracted with his employer under a contract containing the following:

"Each man employed under this agreement agrees with the employer that should such man's employment cease for any reason during the term of this agreement, for 90 days thereafter he will not, by himself, by agents, or as the servant or agent of another, interfere with the business of said employer for a period of 90 days from the cessation of said employment."

Later litigation developed over the validity of this agreement. It is interesting to observe that the higher Massachusetts court held the agreement invalid, and stated its view as follows:

"Such a wide covenant in restraint of trade is broader than a reasonable protection of the plaintiff's business required. It was an 'interference with individual liberty,' was against public policy, and will not be enforced so as to cover the extensive area. . . . The fact that the time limitation was ninety days does not change this rule. While the period runs the restriction is unreasonable. The plaintiff (employer) did not require it for the proper safeguarding of its business and it unjustly restrained the defendants (employes) from following their occupation. . . . The evils resulting from a contract as broad as the one under consideration, even during a period of ninety days, are against public policy."

Reasonable Inspection Necessary

MANY COURTS have held that in order for the operator of a theatre to avoid liability for injuries sustained by patrons or employes it is necessary to prove that the cause of the injury was unknown and, also, that the theatre operator exercised ordinary diligence and care to inspect the premises so that the defect or cause of the injury may have been discovered. This phase of the law was discussed in the late case of James v. Rhode Island (160 Atl. 746).

The facts of this case are that a member of an orchestra was seriously injured when a piano toppled over on him when he attempted to change the position of the instrument.

The employe filed suit against the theatre operator and proved that the piano was off balance due to the fact that one of the casters was missing. Therefore, the higher court held the injured employe entitled to a recovery, and said:

"There was testimony that the caster was missing from the piano for a considerable period and that on previous occasions a block of wood was substituted for it. If this testimony is to be believed, it follows as a matter of law that the defective condition was known or should have been known to the defendant."

Sidewalk Defects

THE LAW is well established that a theatre owner who negligently causes a sidewalk to be defective is liable in damages for an injury sustained by a pedestrian as a result of such defect. For instance, in Smith Company v. Dirr (180 N. E. 197), it was disclosed that a cripple fell upon the sidewalk and suffered severe injuries. The fall was caused by reason of a crutch penetrating a hole in the sidewalk made by a "bull's eye," or glass plug, having become dislodged.

The glass plug had been taken away by an employe a short time before. After discovering its dislocation and trying to fix it in the socket, he had thrown it away.

There was evidence during the trial that the glass plugs were set in their sockets in the sidewalk with a tar compound, and that upon examining the hole, through which the crutch penetrated at the time of the accident it had been found rusty and dirty. In holding the pedestrian entitled to recover, the court said:

"A dangerous condition permitted to exist for a very short time may become a nusiance and a constant menace to the safety of those exposed to it. . . . In the present case the evidence shows that every moment many persons were passing and repassing over this spot. . . . The use of crutches is not extremely unusual."

Alteration of Instrument

NUMEROUS COURTS have held that any material alteration of a negotiable instrument renders the same void, if such alteration is made without consent of the maker. An example of this phase of the law is found in the late case of Cottle v. Sanders (40 S. W. [2d] 979).

In this case it was shown that a note was given and properly signed in the following form:

> "$400.00 Carthage, Texas.
> Without grace, after date, for value received, I, we, or either of us promise to pay to the order of J. D. Cottle," etc.

After it was executed, the words "On or before October 1st" were added in front the words "Without grace." The maker refused to pay the note on the grounds that the holder had without his consent materially altered it by inserting therein the words "on or before October 1st."

The higher court promptly relieved the maker from obligation to pay, saying:

"The note in question here having been altered in a material way after it was executed and delivered by appellee to appellant, it follows appellant was not entitled to recover thereon against the maker thereof, if any, who did not consent to the alteration made."

now as never before the extra effort must be made. If the motion picture had lost its extraordinary appeal, if the majority of the people here and abroad could not afford even inexpensive entertainment, all effort would be futile. But the motion picture theatre business still has its scores of millions of regular customers, and the 14,000 theatres catering to them continue their daily needs—needs become the greater because of delay in supplying them normally. Now burdened with more responsibility for the theatre directly under his supervision, the manager of the circuit house joins the independent owner in taking a shrewd interest in the equipment and furnishings that meet these needs. . . . Twice each year Better Theatres issues a Buyers Number especially designed to guide the theatre executive and technician in the equipment market. The next issue of Better Theatres will be the Buyers Number of the Spring and Summer of 1933, and for it the industry's standard theatre equipment directories, The Equipment Index and Theatre Supply Dealers, are being thoroughly revised. The issue will also contain discussions of the relationship of production methods to motion picture exhibition, systematic maintenance, the law involved in the leasing of sound equipment, theatre architecture in this country and abroad, economical modernization of reproduction facilities, in addition to striking and instructive pictorial material. Knowing intimately the real resources and current requirements of the motion picture theatre business, the publishers have "carried on" as usual in planning this issue. MOTION PICTURE HERALD

WHERE DO WE GO FROM HERE?

by MARTIN QUIGLEY

¶ That the motion picture industry has been standing at the threshold of a new deal has been apparent for some time.

¶ Whether the new deal, involving the restoration of prosperity within the business, will be accomplished is largely contingent upon the quality of leadership displayed and upon the intelligence and sincerity of the men and methods employed.

¶ The crisis in the industry's affairs has been hastened by the national emergency. While the test conceivably could not have been long avoided, the fact is that the determination of the outcome has been made a matter of immediate moment by the bank holiday and its accompanying circumstances.

¶ Thus far in the emergency the trend of industry events has not been of a character to inspire any great enthusiasm as to where the business of motion pictures is going. For reasons which appear quite inexplicable the national emergency was seized upon by the industry as an occasion to broadcast its difficulties. The theatric procedure of fifty per cent cuts was announced, although the identical formula could have been explained in terms of an eight per cent decrease per annum. The seamiest side was held up to the gaze of a public which looks to the motion picture for entertainment, for illusion and for a chance to escape its own troubles, financial and otherwise.

¶ It is held in some quarters that the emergency was seized upon as a means to effect the long-deferred program of salary readjustments in Hollywood. If this be the case, if the industry had to await a national calamity and resort thereto in order to commence putting its house in order in various substantial particulars, then indeed the situation warrants close scrutiny. At any rate there is food for speculation in just how it was reasoned that the formula applied to extravagantly paid people in Hollywood should likewise be applied to modestly paid people in distribution and exhibition.

¶ But assuming for the moment that the principal objective in view was indeed to reach Hollywood: If this be the case, the inevitable outcome is failure because in the application of any such procedure sincerity of purpose on the part of all responsible factors is essential. The recent instance of nepotism and dynastic design in which a young producer, of indifferent record, was jumped over the heads of a list of experienced and successful personnel and into princely salary and prerogatives did more to undo the trend toward normalcy in Hollywood than even the 50 per cent cut program can offset; in addition the incident betrays to informed persons the existence of conditions which laugh at every kind of outside pressure which has yet been brought to bear.

¶ We repeat that the recent industry trend does not inspire confidence for the simple reason that developments seem to be left dependent more upon the efforts of sharp-penciled bookkeepers than upon the efforts of showmen. Where, indeed, it may be asked, are the showmen? What has become of that quality of aggressive showmanship which earned millions out of the picture business before Wall Street learned there was a picture business?

¶ There never has been a substitute for morale—and particularly not in the picture business. Then, it might be asked, "Where are we drifting?" with the business virtually crying to the world that it is bankrupt, with the priceless spirit of its employes crushed and with little or no effort being made to either inform or enthuse the men at the theatre front?

¶ The situation is a test not only of leadership, but the capacity for leadership. It is exceedingly high time that the industry should start keeping its troubles to itself and put on a smile—even though it hurts.

¶ There are about ten thousand theatre men throughout the country who have heard just about all they want to hear of the disastrous results of the policies which they confidently predicted would lead to disaster. They would like to have some answer to the question, where do we go from here?

¶ There is need for a vital spark of confidence and enthusiasm to be struck right here in the home offices with sufficient force so that it will radiate out through the whole business of motion pictures. The spilt milk, now quite adequately cried over, should be quickly and quietly forgotten about so that the industry can go on to the new day and the new deal which is not "just around the corner," but actually here—but here only for those persons and those organizations who put into their activities that aggressive quality of showmanship upon which the picture business was built and through which the picture business can be reborn.

¶ Where do we go from here?

¶ The industry awaits the answer from those who sit in the drivers' seats.

THIS WEEK

RETRIBUTION CAME LAST WEEK TO Sam Kaplan, erstwhile powerful president of New York projectionists' Local 306, since ousted by the parent IATSE, in the form of a conviction, by a jury in New York general sessions court, on charges of coercion. With Kaplan were convicted nine henchmen: Charles E. Eichorn, Frederick E. Castle, Frank Day, Morris J. Rotker, Morris J. Wolheim, Max Feinberg, William Paster, Theodore Greenberg, Paul John Azar. Six others were acquitted. Late this week Judge Nott will pronounce sentence. . . .

STIRRED TO ANGER, RUSHING TO the public in indignation, last week Leo Brecher, owner of New York's Little Carnegie Playhouse (intimate cinema) ran this advertisement anent his German importation, "Hertha's Erwachen" ("Hertha's Awakening"): "No Public Performance Today—Pending an appeal from a ruling (censor) demanding eliminations which would destroy the Artistic and Social value of this unusual film." . . . Early this week appeared this advertisement: "Freed at Last!—Public Opinion Triumphs!" . . . The picture opened—with attendant publicity. Theme: young love, unmarried motherhood. . . .

". . . INSPIRED BY BAD, LOW, SINFUL, immoral and degrading thoughts" are the scenes the motion picture presents, rather than being a "potent factor in education and relaxation after hard labor." Thus did the adjectively prolific Reverend Henry F. Hammer condemn the motion picture in a Lenten address at New York's St. Patrick's Cathedral last Sunday. The Reverend Hammer suggested all good Catholics boycott the film theatre, also attain the end by engaging in devotional prayer. Challenged he: "Picture, if you can, the producer who has used a God-fearing, devout person as his hero." . . .

THE REAR ROOM OF THE SHABBY cigar store came to the front door of the film theatre recently when L. K. Brin, operator, installed in his Milwaukee Riverside theatre an admission innovation: into a machine the patron dropped a penny; out popped a ticket upon which was printed a number, ranging from one to 35. The number was the patron's admission price. District Attorney William A. Zabel held illegality and the innovation was short-lived. Unions grasped the opportunity, however (the Riverside using non-union projection) and one Harry Post, non-union man at the Riverside, suffered concussion of the brain via a billy. . . .

UNDER THE HEAVY CLOUD OF INtimidation, taking the shape of verbal threats, cached bombs, eight Chinese theatres recently succumbed to the pressure of the "Spiritual National Defense Group," announced the entire proceeds of a day would be contributed to a fund for the support of troops engaged in the anti-Japanese campaign. From Del Goodman, of Fox's Shanghai office, comes also this Far Eastern bit: Fearing the effect of sensational films with their display of lawnessness, passion and criminal cunning, on the youth of the country, the committee of the Marwari Association has asked the chief secretary to the government of Bengal, India, carefully to examine all pictures before permitting their exhibition. . . .

OUT ABOVE THE MAELSTROM LAST week stood a net profit, that of Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., for the year ended December 31, 1932, of $862,228, equal after all charges and dividends on the preferred stock, to 12 cents per on common shares. Comparison: $1,303,561 (96 cents per) for 1931. . . .

PERHAPS TWO DECADES AGO A newsboy peddled, sang Irish ballads on the ferry plying between San Francisco and Oakland. Commencing March 12, continuing to April 29, 63 northern California theatres will duly celebrate, via special programs, the Robert A. McNeill Anniversary Motion Picture Jubilee, Mr. McNeill being vice president, general manager of Golden State Theatres, large circuit. The ferry's peddler-vocalist was Bobby McNeill by name. . . .

CLIMAXING THREE MONTHS OF INternal agitation following charges of irregularity, Lieutenant General Alfred F. Foote, Massachusetts commissioner of public safety and consequent head of the state's censor board, petitioned Governor Ely to be relieved of his post. The petition was granted forthwith. Probable successor: Brigadier General John H. Agnew of Lynn. . . .

NEW DEAL—SUPERMEN AND TODAY

"Little old hometown becomes biggest place in America"

by TERRY RAMSAYE

The fated ides of March have come and Caesar is dead. A new order came to Rome when the Dictator fell at the foot of Pompey's statue that day. And on this anniversary, the same ides of March, we mark the death of the recent race of dictators, the supermen of oft acclaimed and bubble-based genius of the era which today litters the path of progress with the debris and the empty leaseholds of their tinsel glory. So a new order comes to America, to industry and to the motion picture.

The scintillant Supermen have fallen and we may hope for a building anew under a dictatorship of plain Commonsense. This Commonsense has been for nearly a decade repressed, suppressed and obscured by the effulgence and the proclamations of the Supermen. Nothing was money but a million. Nothing was good but the great and the super-great, a super world was forced upon us of the commonality by our Supermen—a world of super corporations, super factories, super skyscrapers, super mortgages. And in our own realm of the screen, super circuits, super studios, super productions and super hope.

Once upon a time, sitting in his old brownstone in lower Fifth avenue, Mark Twain looked out his study window to observe a chesty and silk-hatted statesman passing down the way. "There goes a man," he remarked, "who knows a tremendous lot of things—and most of them are not so."

Our Superman, fallen this mad March, now is revealed, too, as having known much that is "not so," and as having built upon it to his own undoing and our discomfort.

All of us can easily remember our doubtings of the last few years. There was a sense of seeming loss in the crumbling of the old doctrines of thrift and good faith and performance. Success seemed to consist for the while in nothing save selling the notion to someone else at an advanced price, letting the last buyer on the line hold the bag. Now we know with considerable accuracy who the bag holders are—all of us.

Everybody bought and sold so much that was not so, so much that had no value save for re-selling, that the dollar fictions overtopped the facts of the goods.

Now while the litter the Supermen have left is being swept up we are to set about applying some of the old re-established Commonsense.

For us this means the conduct of the amusement business on the basis of the consumer capacity of now, the present reality.

A considerable part of the super-machinery and other super manifestations of the motion picture, as in other industries, will be proved to have no part in the business of now and tomorrow.

Quite a considerable part of industrial America, under Supermen supervision, has gone full steam ahead into the debacle by super efficiency which could have been efficient only if there had been no limit to consumption. The cost of the unconsumed result of mad volume production, whether it be in empty seats through hours of screen time, or in bushels of corn or pairs of shoes, falls ultimately upon the usefully consumed fraction. We have seen and are hourly seeing that the costs of the failures of the grandiose super-calculations of the Supermen, who saw no limits, fall not on them but on the whole economic structure.

Where the super mistakes of that order have been made in the motion picture industry we are finding that the costs fall on everyone in the industry, exhibitor, distributor and producer.

For a while the physical survival of the mistakes will clutter the scene, with dark houses, empty vaults and idle stages. Naturally enough the manifestations of the end of the Superman era came first at the retail end where the super-ideas, the super production and super selling impacted upon the inevitable wall of the limit of public consumption. The theatre story is the oldest story of the depression. Next in order comes the distribution story with its waning grosses. Now, at the ides of March we have come to the studio story, the Hollywood production story, last in the line, no darker, no more dismaying, merely the latest and last. The faults are not peculiar to Hollywood. It is only the dress and coloration of the manifestations that are special and peculiar. The story there is the same story that tells it all for all American industry.

The California motion picture production plant, like the great motor mills of Michigan, the great grain production of the Mid-west prairies, was built up on the Superman assumption that there was no end of expansion. We have found, at some price, that one consumer, at one time, can wear only one pair of shoes, eat one dinner, see one motion picture show. Production beyond that may bring the apparent unit cost down, but the real unit cost is the proportionate share of the units consumed, not the units made.

In terms of our business this means that a thousand dollar show sold to two thousand seats, of which half are occupied, costs not fifty cents a seat, but a dollar a customer. In the same fashion the unsuccessful, the unplayed and the surplus motion picture is charge upon those that play and pay.

So now in this last progression of the debunking of the great super-era we find that motion picture industry for the time in quandary about that big machine of production built for the mythical market that had no limits. Commonsense must now reach even Hollywood.

One of the frankest and sharpest minded of top rank executives remarked the other day that if the costly studios were shut down and production was moved into quarters adequate and properly related to the conditions of the time and the requirements of the market, the overhead and interest on the idle property would still place a burden on the product that would keep costs far out of ratio with buying power at the consumer's end of the line.

There will be news now and then for a while, out of both East and West, bearing on that situation, but the motion picture is going on, to be controlled now for a while from the concise perspective of the consumer's end instead of the glamorous world-without-end anticipations of the super-era. The adjustments that are in the making are not special and peculiar

INCREASED "BICYCLING" BRINGS NEW WARNING

Temporary Disappearance of Cans of Film Coupled with Speedy Pickup Service; Complaints to Protection Bureau

Illegal sub-renting and "bicycling" of feature films by exhibitors has shown a marked increase during the past six months, according to Jack Levin, director of operations for the Copyright Protection Bureau.

"When the Bureau first started operations on a national scale six years ago, the 'bicycling' practices of 'switching,' sub-renting and 'two-theatres-for-the-price-of-one rental,' were in their heyday," Mr. Levin said. "During the last few years the trend of violations was decidedly toward the unauthorized holdover. Now that the Bureau has made the force of its attacks against the holdover felt in every section, there appears to be a resumption of unlawful exhibitions of the non-contract type of violation."

Mr. Levin said a number of complaints have been made to the Bureau by distributors and exhibitors in the past two months. The complaints have come from widely separated parts of the country and show a startling revival of illicit sub-renting of film and acquisition of prints from other illegal sources for unauthorized exhibitions, he said.

Checking of complaints of such exhibitions in the New Haven territory showed that cans of film temporarily had disappeared from the exchange building after they had been left there by the pickup service for inspection and re-winding.

"In Washington, D. C., cans of film had mysteriously disappeared from the vaults of an exchange," Mr. Levin continued, "and in the Los Angeles territory, which was recently a hot-bed for sub-renting, prints disappeared from delivery trucks while in transit and turned up later at the exchanges."

Discussing conditions in the Buffalo territory, Mr. Levin said that in four towns theatres which had not contracted for the pictures were having film "sneaked in" and still getting the prints back to the exchanges at the expected time. This, he declared, was managed by a certain group of exhibitors who cooperated with their own film pickup service and worked on a faster schedule than the regular train service.

"Similar complaints from exhibitors concerning this type of unfair competition and 'chiseling' of playing time by sub-renting of film, have materially affected theatres in Philadelphia, Minneapolis, Los Angeles and Memphis territories within the past six weeks," Mr. Levin said.

"Most of these exhibitors had been in trouble with the exchanges for copyright violations disclosed by the Bureau in past years. One of the exhibitors in California had been warned by the Bureau's representative against 'holding over' only last summer. He promised to refrain from any such practices, and he did, but went into the business of illegally sub-renting his film instead. Apparently present economic conditions must have led these exhibitors to believe that supervision has been relaxed."

Mr. Levin said he wanted all exhibitors to communicate with the Bureau directly in all cases where they are approached to purchase or rent pictures from other than an authorized agent of the distributors.

This week in the United States district court at Boston, Judge McLellan clarified the decision of a circuit court of appeals last April in action brought by MGM and Educational against Beacon Theatre Company, Holyoke, Mass., by sustaining the distributors' contention they were entitled to proceed under the federal copyright law in cases of unauthorized exhibition arising out of holdovers.

to the motion picture. They are common to all industry. The motion picture no longer stands alone. It is interwoven into the whole of the social and industrial fabric. The write-offs are inevitable, as the super-ideas give way to the facts of commonsense, the facts of today.

We are learning again some very old truths, in this coming back to facts after the crash of fancies. One of them is that capital, money, is a living thing, the essence of which is in the living, the going, the movement, the making and the spending. This is laden with special and cheerful meaning to the motion picture, which is so much a business of movement of daily turnover and continuous activity. Wealth, we have amply demonstrated, is not, after all, something that can in any large sense be committed to a strong-box. It has to keep going to keep alive and strong. In the ides of March, 1933, even gold, locked up or buried, got too hot to hold.

The motion picture therefore is worth from day to day what from day to day the consuming public can be induced to pay for screen entertainment. The inducements consist of competent production, adequate selling, competent presentation, aimed precisely at the ever moving Now. That is not a superman's job. It is a job for Commonsense, with its feet on the ground and its ear at the box office.

Here and there, which means really all over, in the motion picture industry, there has been lament and a crying that "the time demands leadership." It is comfortable to believe in a Santa Claus. It is easy to look about and say that somewhere a Moses will come to lead out of the wilderness. But today the fact is that the motion picture and all American industry can well be done and through with too much leadership. The leaders are all Supermen, and all Supermen have gone bust.

The motion picture will have, is now in the process of getting new leadership, but it will be personified in no Superman. The new leadership will be found to consist in each individual showman doing the job of today, doing it today for today's customers. Some 10 or 12 thousand showmen, operating the box offices, are the new leaders of the new era. They will each succeed as they serve their audiences. Back of them production and distribution will succeed as they serve these showmen. As a whole the industry will prosper as it serves. Those who do not serve will be in the hole.

Now the motion picture can and will turn to the selling of, not so much real estate and architecture, but more entertainment. The theatre will be now somewhat more a part of the town and less of something that was superimposed on the community by Superman expressing himself in a big national way. Tonight's show will be "the picture at the Lyric" instead of "the hit from Yonder," or "the super-production from Hollywood."

Little old hometown is in a fair way to become the biggest place in America—unless the Supermen get us again.

Loew Sails for Germany To Study Studio Possibility

Arthur Loew, head of MGM'S foreign department, will leave for Germany next week to make a survey of the general situation there and to decide whether or not it is feasible at the present time to launch a new production unit in that country. Mr. Loew is reported to be primarily interested in ascertaining whether or not, once a studio is established, there will be any difficulties about remaining in operation under American management.

Mr. Loew will visit Metro studios in Paris and Rome. The Italian plant has been in operation for two months while the Paris studio will open in about four weeks. He will be gone for six weeks.

ROOSEVELT ACTION AIDS BUSINESS; FILM INDUSTRY REVISES PAY CUTS

New Scale of Reductions Exempts Salaries Under $50 a Week; Theatre Attendance Up With Reopenings

Exhibitors at Mass Meetings Call for Lower Rentals and Extension of Credit; Union Rates Go Into Arbitration

The immediate results of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt's dramatic action in taking drastic steps to effect reconstruction of the economic fabric of American business, began to make themselves evident throughout the nation with the reopening of the banks Monday and Tuesday. Leaders in motion pictures were predicting a brighter outlook as theatre box-offices responded to the nationwide upturn.

While bankers were setting up machinery for a return to normalcy, with the aid of the Administration, the motion picture industry was adjusting itself to the sharp recoils from drastic salary slashes ordered last week by the large corporations. Principal developments in the week were:

> Production shutdown averted after unions refused to accede to 25 and 50 per cent cuts. They agreed to arbitrate, the decision to bind theatre workers.
> New salary scale invoked for all employees of large companies.
> Studio workers and Academy committee draw up 14-plank agreement.
> Theatre owners demand immediate relief from distributors, requesting credit leeway and rental cuts during emergency. Threaten to close if no action is taken.
> Exhibitors' requests based on 30 to 75 per cent slump in grosses during bank moratorium. Amicable adjustment in individual cases intimated after distributor conferences.
> Scrip still being used at some theatres in lieu of currency.
> Many exchanges continue demands for cash payment on delivery of prints.

Almost overnight the severity of the situation which developed as a result of the national bank holiday, began to lessen and a more optimistic tone was noticeable in film quarters on both coasts and in the field.

Deposits soared, and a swing back to normalcy in general business was nationwide. This was reflected immediately in admission receipts.

On Wednesday, the New York Stock Exchange and most other exchanges reopened, bringing an end to the President's banking holiday. Trading on the Stock Exchange opened briskly with prices during the day rising from 3 to 11 points higher than the close on March 3. Shares sold totaled 3,700,000, marking the most active day on the Exchange floor since last September. It was a "roaring bull" market.

That a sharp upturn in theatre business will follow bank reopenings nationally, within a few days, was predicted in New York, based upon the general reaction.

Theatre business nationally experienced its most serious decline of the holiday during last weekend, but this was anticipated in view of the extreme shortage of currency then.

WHEN A SHOWMAN GETS A NOTION

Once upon a time, too long ago to mention dates, I was in charge of the exploitation affairs of the releasing corporation which marketed the product of Edwin Thanhouser, the smartest German who ever came out of Milwaukee to make pictures. They made money for him and everybody who handled them. Thanhouser got enough to quit. Meanwhile he, and the able and late Charles J. Hite, brought up and launched upon the industry a studio and production manager of the same sort of level headed ability, one W. Ray Johnston. Mr. Johnston learned his motion picture ideas when the "Million Dollar Mystery" was making 700 percent for the stockholders and plenty for exhibitors, when Jimmy Cruse and Margaret Snow and Flo LaBadie were box office names.

Now he and his "Monogram" are on their own, armed with all the ideas and concepts that he had when the whole motion picture industry was on its own, when the motion picture was a movie made to sell and be sold. So we have currently his spectacular splash, in the face of the cloudy days of the status quo, with "Oliver Twist" and its exciting Albany opening.

It is a pleasingly independent manifestation—a sort of declaration that the motion picture business is the motion picture business, and let the devil take the hindmost. This W. Ray Johnston came up out of the day when the movies were extremely on their own. Their chief asset then was a certain "know how" and courage. "Know how" and courage are still the chief assets of showmen.

—TERRY RAMSAYE

President Roosevelt's second and third planks, the so-called "economy measure" and the beer bill, developed additional optimism. The beer bill is expected to benefit exhibitors directly in many cities, particularly in the large brewing centers of Milwaukee, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Brooklyn and New York, where 300,000 unemployed will return to work with additional spending power created.

With banks reopened, exchanges expected an immediate easing of credit and collection difficulties. Exchanges in several territories continued to demand cash on delivery of prints.

The industry passed another crisis this week when a complete cessation of practically all production activities was averted in Hollywood, after the refusal of 8,000 union workers to accept the 25 and 50 per cent wage reduction ordered last week by the large companies. A compromise pay agreement was effected Monday night for other employees, everywhere, and decision was made to debate the controversy with union representatives. The studios reopened Tuesday morning following a holiday on Monday.

The revised scale for producer-distributor employees in home offices, theatres, exchanges and studios, except union workers, places the brunt of the emergency salary slash on the more highly-paid, and exempts minor employees earning $50 weekly or less.

Brought on suddenly ten days ago by the stringency of the state and national banking holidays, the new order cancels an agreement to reduce by 25 per cent all salaries under $50, and 50 per cent for wages above. Instead, a new industry-wide scale was effected, as follows: 25 per cent reduction on salaries from $51 to $75, with a $50 minimum; 35 per cent on $75 to $100, minimum $65; 50 per cent on $101 or over, with a minimum of $75. Salaries under $50, therefore, will remain untouched.

Small Earners Protected

This decision was arrived at simultaneously Monday night in Hollywood and in New York, at meetings of the most important leaders of production and of home offices. The protection thereby afforded small wage earners reacted favorably almost immediately on both coasts. Upwards of 30,000 employees in home offices, studios, exchanges and theatres were affected by the original 25-50 per cent decree. The new agreement considerably lessens this total, and automatically will reduce the eight-week savings of $5,500,000, which it was estimated would be effected by the first order.

Notices of the revision were sent Tuesday and Wednesday to home office workers and to staffs in the field by Columbia, Educational-World Wide, Fox, MGM and Loew's, Paramount, RKO, United Artists, Universal and Warner-First National.

Film Boards of Trade will benefit by the revision, and so will workers of the Hays organization, executives of which had agreed to the reductions.

Fox and Educational-World Wide did not accept the 35 per cent reduction clause as provided in the new agreement for salaries of between $76 and $100. In both cases there will be a flat 50 per cent cut on wages above $76, with a $75 minimum. It was reported late Wednesday night that Fox had revised its scale, but details were not available.

Following temporary settlement of the controversy with the unions, orders were dispatched to workers in Hollywood to return to work Tuesday morning. For a time, over the weekend, it appeared that a deadlock on the issue would keep the studios closed indefinitely.

Fox resumed production on "Adorable" and "Pilgrimage." Twenty-one production units, all working on features, resumed activities at the other studios, including MGM, five; Warners, seven; Paramount, six; Radio, one; Columbia, two. During the eight-week period, Warners plans to start two others and to prepare a similar number. Radio expects to continue its original expansion program, placing ten features in work within the next two months. Universal's studio remains closed.

Action on the first order to effect 25 and 50 per cent cuts was taken in New York and Hollywood March 6 and was agreed to by all producer-distributor members of the MPPDA as being the only alternative to a complete shutdown of studios due to inability of the industry to meet a $1,300,000 weekly studio payroll because of the banking moratorium. The severe wage reduction was adopted after all-night conferences in the Waldorf-Astoria tower apartment of Will H. Hays. A minority group is understood to have offered a less drastic plan.

Representatives of the Federated Motion Picture Studio Crafts, comprising the large unions working at Hollywood studios, threatened a general strike Saturday noon. Twenty-four studio unions were said to have been involved.

Meanwhile all large producers called a general cessation of filming activities for Monday and the unions agreed to postpone the strike over the weekend in order to work out a compromise. This was forthcoming late Monday night when a hastily called emergency committee of the Academy of Arts and Sciences met with executives of the Motion Picture Producers Association and reached an agreement on a new scale for unorganized workers, numbering about 20,000, also deciding to continue the present scale for the 8,000 union employees pending arbitration, which is expected to take three weeks. Arbitration was demanded by the unions under the terms of their basic agreement.

Cut Retroactive If Voted

Although the studio unions will continue at full pay during the arbitration period, they have agreed that the cut will be retroactive if they lose. Agreement of the unorganized workers to continue under the lower salary order was obtained before decision was made to continue full payment to union members pending arbitration. The unions insisted their basic wage agreement must hold on full salary, even if they were to be paid in promissory notes or scrip.

Players, writers, directors, cameramen and other creative workers under contract to studios will still have the choice of accepting either a flat 50 per cent cut for the eight weeks, where salaries are above $100, or of working one month without pay. Word of the new agreement reached actors and directors while they were assembled in separate mass meetings Monday night. Both groups heard the reports of their individual committee representatives, Lawrence Grant for the players, and William K. Howard for the directors.

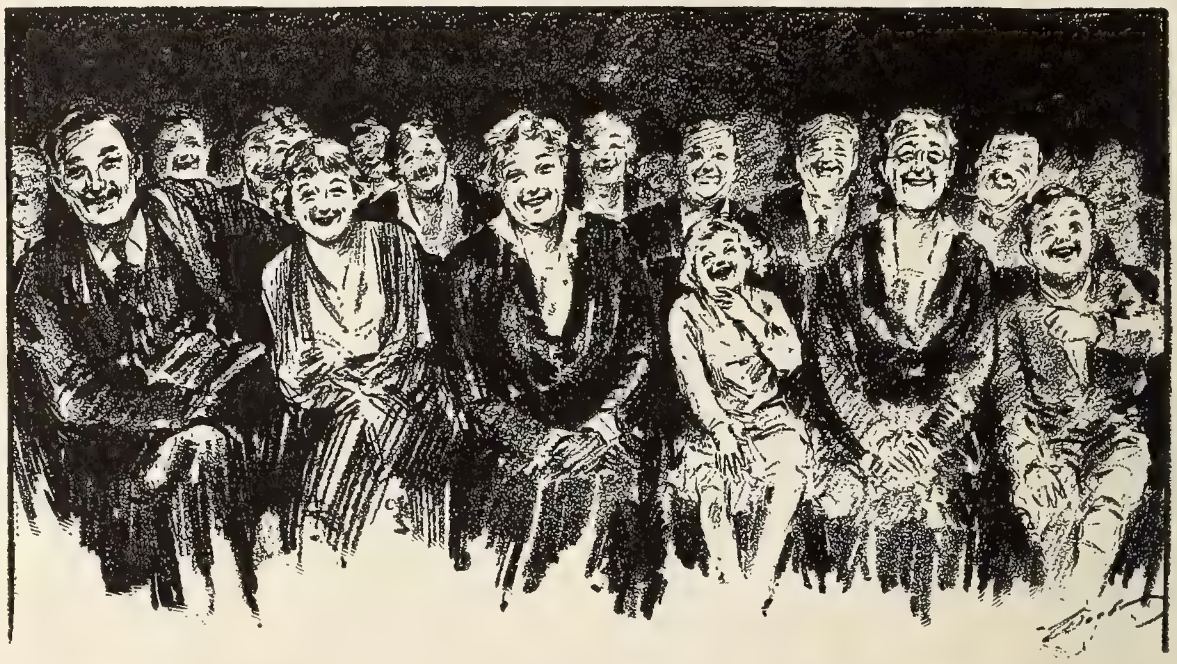
Would Donate Month's Pay

Directors will handle their individual cases directly with producers. The majority expressed the opinion they will donate a month's salary instead of taking the cut.

Actors will have mass meetings at their respective studios. Eighty-five per cent of the players on each lot must sign an agreement to make the cut effective. There were no refusals of important players, although some actors did delay action pending consultations either with lawyers or agents.

The Academy's emergency committee will continue in session to handle disputes and also special cases. The group already has 200 cases to arbitrate.

The new scale in Hollywood was said to be definitely for an eight-week period, and it was agreed that if any studio at any time in the interim finds itself financially able it can rescind the cut sooner. Producers will act individually in such cases. There still is, however, some speculation on the Coast as to just what books and records the employee will be permitted to inspect. The question also was raised whether the difference in salary cuts would be returned when studios begin to make money again.



"You owe yourself a show. It's waiting for you. Come and get it." That's the way J. C. Moffitt, motion picture critic of the Kansas City Star, put it in a bit of essay under the cartoon, captioned "Lay Worry Aside at the Movies," which appeared Sunday, before the lifting of the bank moratorium. He observed that "maybe a few laughs at the misadventures of the chaps in the comedies will enable you to smile at some of your own predicaments."

The studio agreement drawn by the Academy "war board," with representatives of the Producers Association, has 14 planks, namely: (1) Emergency committee given powers to inspect conditions of individual companies and to audit their books with a view to lifting the ban before eight weeks; (2) Reopen studios Tuesday; (3) Adoption of a new standard waiver which calls for eight weeks at half salary, or donation of full pay for four weeks—for all under contract; (4) Eight-week time limit to all cuts, beginning March 6 and ending April 30; (5) Permission given to persons under contract to sign waiver as described in plank three; (6) Status of free-lancers adjusted to mean those who have not worked in any studio continuously for ten weeks, such workers to be cut eight-twentieths of salary per annum on the assumption that free-lancers work only 23 weeks per year; (7) IATSE and other unions of the "big four" group to receive full pay during three weeks while arbitrating in New York; (8) Wages of other technical help to be reduced, but this to be governed by IATSE action; (9) Emergency committee—composed of one representative of writers, directors, technicians, actors, producers—to maintain daily sessions; (10) Any studio may drop cut before eight weeks if audits justify; (11) Individuals under contract (including those at Fox) who signed the first waivers may keep them if they prefer, or sign new ones; (12) Whole agreement hinges on its being accepted by 85 per cent of contract persons by next Monday; (13) If majorities are not obtained at any studio, those studios must give full pay until closing, if it is decided to close. The fourteenth plank provided for an earlier mass meeting.

Members of the Hollywood Independent Motion Picture Producers Association have taken no action on salary cuts. They voted last Saturday to retain all labor under old scales. W. Ray Johnston's Monogram Pictures led the New York independent distributors in declaring against lower salaries.

Every official and employee of Actors' Equity Association must take one week's vacation out of every sixth without pay, according to a ruling made this week.

The board of directors of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in New York, to which practically all home office advertising and publicity workers belong, issued a statement on Tuesday, which said: "Due to the drastic salary cuts and the consequent hardships imposed on its members, the board of directors of the AMPA today voted to suspend meetings for a period of four weeks starting Thursday, March 16th."

Meanwhile, dozens of big-name vaudeville performers in split-policy houses were threatened with unemployment unless they agree to abide by the industry's decision on a new salary scale. Circuits threatened to darken vaudeville houses unless the performers agreed to take the cuts.

Vaudeville players were told that "this is an emergency measure in which vaudeville performers are asked to accept either a 50 per cent reduction from their present salary for an eight week period beginning March 22 or 23 or, in lieu thereof, to accept a reduction of 25 per cent of their customary salary until September 1."

Home office executives of circuits met in RKO headquarters at Radio City late Monday to draw the agreement. Present were Harold B. Franklin, RKO; Col. E. A. Schiller, Loew's; Sam Dembow, Publix, and a representative of Warners, also 70 agents of performers.

One hundred vaudeville persons, banded informally under leadership of Pat Rooney and Bob Murphy, assembled Monday night at the Edison hotel in Times Square to discuss what action might be taken. The group is expected to cooperate.

The union situation as it affects both studios in Hollywood and theatres throughout the nation will be the subject of conferences which begin in New York probably early next week. William C. Elliott, president of the IATSE, and Joseph N. Weber, head of the American Federation of Musicians, were due in New York from Hollywood to take up the question of salary cuts for studio union workers, projectionists, stage hands and other crafts, with executives of the large corporations. Will H. Hays probably will sit in on the conferences. The circuit committee is expected to include Sam Dembow, for Publix; E. A. Schiller, Loew's; Joseph Bernhard, Warners, and H. B. Franklin, of RKO.

Producer conferences on the salary question in Hollywood were attended by Winfield Sheehan, of Fox; Louis B. Mayer, MGM; Merian C. Cooper and B. B. Kahane, Radio; Jack L. Warner, Warner Brothers, and Albert A. Kaufman.

In New York, executives attending most of the sessions included: Will H. Hays, president of the MPPDA; Adolph Zukor, Paramount; M. H. Aylesworth and David Sarnoff, RKO; Sidney R. Kent, Fox; Carl Laemmle and R. H. Cochrane, Universal; Harry M. and Albert Warner, Warner Brothers; Ned Depinet, Radio Pictures; H. B. Franklin, RKO Theatres; Jack Cohn, Columbia; Nicholas M. Schenck, MGM; E. A. Schiller, Loew's; Sam Dembow, Jr., Publix, and E. W. Hammons, of Educational and World-Wide.

Executives Dig Into Own Pockets

The cut brought to light many commendable instances in which New York executives completely sacrificed their own interests to help employees. Announcement was made at the Warner home office Saturday that the three Warner brothers, Harry, Major Albert and Jack, had decided that while the present emergency lasts they would turn over the remaining 50 per cent of their salaries to a fund to help needy employees. The special fund was placed in the charge of Sam Schneider, Stanley Friedman, and Sam Carlisle.

Arthur Loew sent out notices to the MGM home office foreign staff of 35, over which he has supervision, that he personally would pay for all lunches in the office during the eight-week period.

Employees of both United Artists and MGM were assured by their executives that any financial assistance necessary would be extended during the eight weeks.

Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film, instead of taking the 50 per cent cut, which would have brought his salary down from $2,500 to $1,250 a week, voluntarily slashed it to $500, making a cut of 80 per cent.

Harry M. Warner is understood to have informed all his employees that the industry salary cut, in its revised form, was ordered to apply for the eight-week period, but that it might last only two weeks. Whether Mr. Warner was speaking only for Warner Bros. could not be determined.

Almost immediately after the story of the pay cuts was flashed, hundreds of independent exhibitors, individually and collectively, began last Friday to storm film exchanges in every key city and home offices in New York with demands for more credit leeway and for rental reductions of 30 to 50 per cent.

Theatre owners claimed that unless rental concessions were forthcoming, houses would be darkened wholesale. Allied of New Jersey requested that distributors supply a complete show, including feature, shorts and newsreel, and take 25 per cent of receipts, using distributor checkers.

The general complaint was that business at theatres was off between 30 and 75 per cent under last year, although exhibitors still were being charged the same rentals. The industry was reputed to have lost at least $14,000,000 in admissions alone as a result of the bank holiday.

Early last Friday, exhibitors were beginning to formulate plans for territorial mass meetings. Owners already had met, or were preparing to assemble, in Des Moines, New York, New Jersey, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Indianapolis, Boston, New Haven, Milwaukee, Cleveland, Salt Lake City, Dallas and elsewhere.

CHINESE PICK STARS AND FILMS

Here are the selections of greatest stars and best pictures of the year, as made by Chinese readers of the Pictorial Weekly, Linloon Magazine, and Radio and Movie Daily News, in Shanghai:

Following are the ten leading stars, in order of votes received:

Janet Gaynor
Greta Garbo
Jeanette MacDonald
Marlene Dietrich
Charles Farrell
Maurice Chevalier
Norma Shearer
Joan Crawford
Wallace Beery
Lionel Barrymore

The ten pictures chosen, in order of votes, are:

"Love Me To-night," "Doomed Battalion," "White Hell of Pitz Palu," "Mata Hari," "Four Infantrymen," "One Hour With You," "First Year," "The Man I Killed," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "The Man From Yesterday."

Practically every neighborhood theatre in Cleveland was closed indefinitely. New York owners estimated at least 500 houses might be darkened in the East.

Typical was the action taken by representatives of 83 neighborhood theatres of Connecticut, assembled at New Haven, in voting to remain open pending negotiations with distributing companies. A flat percentage deal is sought.

M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, sent word from Memphis that exhibitors were highly resentful of distributors' actions in cancelling release dates of outstanding product, temporarily during the emergency. He said "theatres should get quality product as a boost to sagging box-offices."

Abram F. Myers, general chairman of Allied States Association, hurried to New York from Washington early Tuesday to seek concessions on rentals and on credit for exhibitors. His arguments were "sympathetically" received, he reported, although the companies indicated to him that they did not favor a blanket reduction on film rentals, but rather an adjustment on individual cases. Mr. Myers suggested that grosses of November, December and January be bulked as against grosses during the bank holiday, and adjustment computed therefrom.

Appeal to Exchanges

Mr. O'Reilly was vested last Friday with power-of-attorney by 200 New York independent owners, to negotiate with general sales managers directly.

At noon on Friday, exhibitors led by Mr. O'Reilly assembled in New York and adopted the slogan, "A Roosevelt of the Film Industry to Save Our Theatres." Mr. O'Reilly named as aides Jack Springer, Lee A. Ochs, William Brandt, Louis Frisch, Sam Sonin, A. H. Schwartz, Benjamin Sherman and Louis F. Blumenthal. Sidney Samuelson's New Jersey Allied association decided to wire exchanges for action. If answers favorable to exhibitors were not forthcoming, word was to be sent to Governor Harry Moore that 100 theatres in the state would close.

The TOCC committee met Wednesday with Jules Levy, representing the producers.

In some places, exchange managers were vested with authority to provide shows on a credit policy, such action to be taken at the managers' discretion only on indicated accounts. Three golf balls were accepted for cash by a Paramount client in the Northwest.

General New York sales executives said salesmen had been called in off the road and had accepted a four weeks' vacation without pay instead of eight weeks at the reduced wage scale.

Many independent exchanges in key cities dispatched notices to exhibitors that they would provide credit or accept checks for their product.

Fox and MGM at first postponed March releases, then rescinded the orders Wednesday.

About 62 feature releases between now and May 1 were promised by the large distributors. Independents, including Monogram, First Division, Allied, Majestic, Freuler and others promised to contribute considerably to the list.

The initial reduction of salaries was pronounced "too drastic" by E. W. Hammons, president of Educational.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, declared "the worst traitor is the man who seeks to turn these disturbed times to his own advantage."

Union Reductions Sought

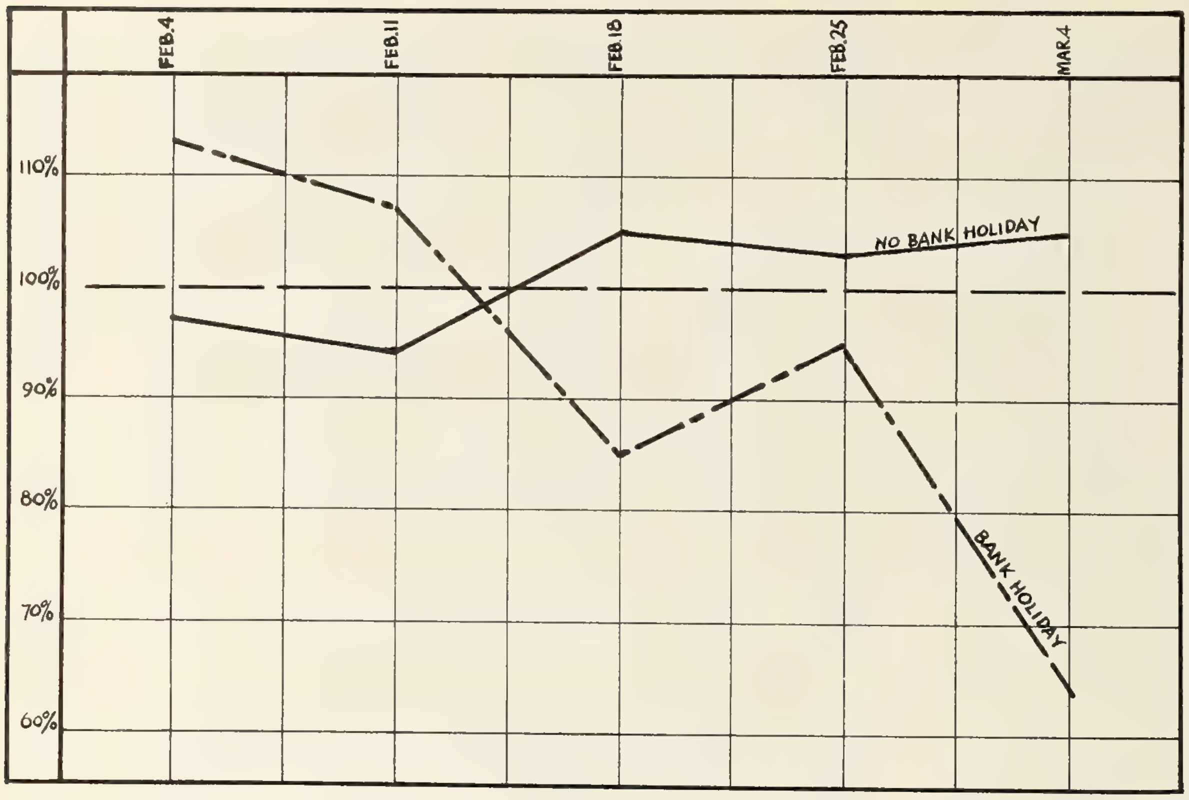
During the moratorium, Boston theatres averaged a 50 per cent decrease in receipts; Cleveland, 50 per cent and upwards; Kansas City, 30 to 50; Los Angeles, 35; Omaha, 25 to 75; New York, 35 to 60; New Jersey, 75; San Francisco, 30; Memphis, 50 to 90; Houston, 25; Denver, 10 to 50; Columbus and Cincinnati, 35 to 65. Suburban and neighborhood theatres were particularly hard hit.

Exhibitors are looking as much to theatre unions for relief as to exchanges. Five hundred projectionists in 200 northern California theatres voted unanimously to reduce their wage scale 37½ per cent during the emergency.

Eighty neighborhood theatres in Cleveland closed indefinitely when unions refused to accept 50 per cent reductions. Eleven first-runs likewise threatened to darken on Thursday unless a 25 per cent slash is agreed to by the unions.

Kansas City unions tentatively rescinded strike orders, agreeing to accept half-pay, with promissory notes for the balance, pending possible revision of contracts later. Prctically the same agreement was effected in Milwaukee, and, in New York, revision of scales was said to be under way. St. Paul owners seek a 40 per cent cut, it was said.

Musicians in New York accepted a 20 per cent salary cut Tuesday. The cut will apply not only to small circuits and independent houses but also to the Broadway de luxe situations, effective until September 1.



The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's listings of box office grosses, indicates the effect of the bank holidays on theatre receipts before March 4. The solid line represents the total business done in three cities not affected by the holiday before March 4. These are Boston, New York and Chicago. The dotted line indicates the total business done in three cities in which banks were closed for some time before March 4—Cleveland, Detroit and Indianapolis. The average weekly gross for each group of cities during the month of February, 1933, is taken as the 100 per cent for that group.

Sees Patron Loss By Sophistication

Insisting that there is an over-abundance of sex and sophistication in the motion picture production of today, John L. Murphy, production manager for the Harold Lloyd Corporation, in Portland, Ore., recently on a visit, expressed the emphatic opinion that "people have turned away from the picture theatres because they have been disappointed and offended too often."

"I can't help believing there is a relation between clean films and profits," said Mr. Murphy. "Clean shows always have been the most profitable in the long run. I'm not thinking so much of the moral issues involved. I'm looking at the situation as a picture producer and thinking of what is good for the entire industry."

Agreeing that there is a legitimate field for adult, sophisticated entertainment, Mr. Murphy insisted that field did not encompass the neighborhood theatre, and advocated "certain theatres for certain kinds of pictures. Sophistication may be profitable on the stage where it can play to selected audiences, but it is no good for pictures. Pictures must be made for everybody."

Westinghouse Cash Position Improved

Current assets of Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company increased to $21,939,245 in 1932 from $20,585,564 the year before, the annual report says. Current assets were $78,816,115 at the end of 1932, and current liabilities $4,333,692. A year before current assets were $100,522,486 and current liabilities $7,368,011.

Lightman to Quit If Voting Delayed

M. A. Lightman, president of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, announced this week that unless the board called an election immediately, he would leave his position by the end of the current week. Mr. Lightman said he had notified the board of his resignation.

"I will wash my hands of the office entirely unless there is some action in the next four or five days," he said on Tuesday. "If the board would call a meeting, or arrange an election by mail or telegraph within two weeks, I would hang on until then. I have held on too long now, and must give up the office to devote my time to my private interests."

50 Killed in Accident and Panic in Mexican Theatre

Fifty people were killed on Monday night in the Hidalgo theatre in Ahualuluco, State of Jalisco, Mexico, as the result of the falling of a high tension wire across a metal balcony railing thronged with spectators at a film performance. Twenty were electrocuted, while 30 were trampled to death in the resulting stampede of 1,000 for the exits.

At least 70 persons were injured. The greater part of the population of the small mining town was in the theatre, which was seldom used. The performance had been arranged by Efren Ramos, owner of the building, who was arrested. He had drawn the audience by distributing tickets to the customers of his corn grinding mill.

Missouri Governor Asks Admission Tax

Governor Park of Missouri sent a special message to the Missouri House and Senate Tuesday recommending the passage immediately of House bill 616, which provides, among other things, a 5 per cent tax for admission to theatres. Governor Park has an overwhelming majority in both the Senate and the House. This is the first special message sent to any legislature by any governor affecting motion pictures since 1919. In the original Missouri bill the tax was 10 per cent.

GAINSBOROUGH GOES STAR SYSTEM AND BRITAIN'S EYEBROWS GO UP

Subsidiary of Gaumont Adopts Hollywood Methods, Even to Training for Stardom, After Cautious Study of Trends

by BERNARD CHARMAN
London Correspondent

Some remarks of C. M. Woolf at the annual general meeting of Gainsborough Pictures, production subsidiary of Gaumont-British, cast back in my teeth my own observations recently on the lack of star building policy in the British studios. "We have fully recognized, and experience has shown us, that the public go to see a film on account of the particular players who are featured," said Mr. Woolf, "and however clever your film director, however expert your technicians, it is the name of the featured player that counts, and, therefore, we have very definitely adopted what I may call the star system."

Before reading further you may consider it worth notice that the policy of Gainsborough over the past year has been successful to the extent of earning a dividend of 9 per cent for shareholders. This is the stable that has produced pictures so successful on the home and dominions markets as "Sunshine Susie" and "Jack's the Boy," so that the views expressed by its chief must be regarded with respect.

Not Taking All for Granted

There may be something naive to the ears of hardboiled Hollywood in the remarks quoted, in the truisms that have been part of America's production system for years. But allowance first must be made for the fact that the problems of the home market (toward which British studios naturally primarily turn) are not necessarily the problems of the markets at which the average American production is principally aimed. We have, of course, been able to learn much from the experience of the West Coast plants, but our studio folk have been wise in not taking it all for granted, preferring even to be regarded as laggards in the fields of progress so long as they could satisfy themselves that each development they might make would be regarded as progressive in the eyes of the English cinema public.

They have not, as I read it, accepted as a finality the fact that any given English actress leading a British picture makes it an unqualified box office job. They have gone their own cautious way, and have waited for the proof before committing themselves to a definite line of policy.

It needed the successes of Walls and Lynn, Jack Hulbert, and Jack Buchanan to convince them that some law or something similar applies to the British fan as to his American brother. Once convinced they have gone boldly forward. The policy outlined in Mr. Woolf's speech indicates a forward move that will now be steadfastly continued.

"In conjunction with Gaumont-British," Mr. Woolf goes on, "we have under contract to us at the present moment such well-known names as Jack Hulbert, Cicely Courtneidge, Jessie Matthews, Madeleine Carroll, Albert Burdon, Gordon Harker and so on," (observe one thing—the balance between masculine and faminine names) "but I would also say that your directors, recognizing fully how essential it is that they should have a definite supply of stars from which to draw, have taken what I may call a long view and are creating their own by placing under contract and training, with all the resources at their command, unknown players who have been chosen with very great care from a very large number of individuals.

"At present we have definitely under contract seven stars in embryo who, as well as featuring in small parts in our productions, are being taught every side of the business. I mention this fact because in the production of films it is just as essential as in the production of other product that one has a source of supply from which good material can be drawn."

Mr. Woolf's statement would have been of even greater interest had be outlined the steps that are being taken to develop these potential purveyors of heart throbs. They are said to be bound under small salaries —around $20, I believe—and their training includes a great deal of academic work. The principle of the system is education rather than grooming. But whatever the system it is interesting, nevertheless, to be able to place this development on record. It makes one realize that, in spite of the violent criticism continually launched at British production methods, there are those in the field who are giving much constructive thought to the subject, particularly around the Gaumont-British studios. That company already has established itself in an unassailable position here; who is to deny that it may conceivably occupy ultimately a similar position in relation to the entire industry?

Sunday Opening

The Sunday opening situation continues to maintain its position in the limelight owing to the absurdities that the legislation in respect of it bears in its train. An example is provided by the Croydon situation. Here the champions of Sunday cinemas won a glorious victory when the matter was debated by the Council, the local administrators passing a decided vote in favor of it. But—the requirements of the law demanded a meeting of electors, and when they congregated they negatived the verdict of the municipal body by an overwhelming majority. Even now, however, the affair is not cleared up, for the defeated side has the right to ask for a poll, which in this case they have done. That poll is still to be held. On the principle, presumably, that third time pays for all, the result of that poll will be the final decision as to whether Croydon shall be respectable and remain at home on the Sabbath or profligate and haunt the wicked picture theatres.

Croydon is only one point of action. There are hundreds of local authorities up and down the island who will be called upon to grapple with the problem. Some already have done so, and in one instance at least the matter has been finally sealed, settled and delivered in good order by Parliament, whose members have graciously ratified the particular council's request for permission to allow its theatres to open on Sundays. This procedure has to be followed in every case, so if the Government pleads with Mr. Roosevelt that it hasn't time to attend to trivial matters like debt settlements you'll know the reason why!

It's a New Development in British Production Circles; Absurdities of Sunday Show Situation Take New Turns

American Piece de Resistance

Twelve months ago I had the pleasure of introducing a popular little American star to one of our typically English articles of diet—fish and chips. Now an American former film magnate is returning the compliment in plenty by endeavoring to popularize here one of your prime American dainties. In other words, Jimmy Bryson, former London chief of Universal, has launched a fleet of barrows offering to the public of the metropolis the sublime joy of the hot dog.

VOLUNTARY PETITION IN BANKRUPTCY DOES NOT AFFECT PARAMOUNT FILMS

Company Solvent, Aim Is to Conserve Assets Against Multiple Law Suits, Says Zukor, Retained with Hilles

Production, Distribution and Exhibition Unchanged: Zukor; Fox Rocky Mountain, Midland Circuits in Receivership

Paramount Publix Corp. filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in New York federal district court Tuesday, listing liabilities of $55,317,767 and assets of $153,748,885. The company had been in equity receivership since January 26. The announcement was made before Judge William Bondy's court by Granville E. Clark, counsel for the corporation, as argument was about to be started by Samuel Zirn, counsel for a group of minority bondholders which had opposed the equity receivership. Judge Bondy set a general hearing for Friday.

Mr. Clark said the corporation was not insolvent in the sense of assets not being sufficient to balance its liabilities, but that it could not meet current bills because some of the assets were frozen and could be liquidated only at distress prices.

Judge Bondy authorized the two receivers, Adolph Zukor and Charles D. Hilles, to continue in that capacity for the time being. Appointment of permanent receivers in bankruptcy may be made by the court on Friday, at which time an order to show cause why Mr. Zukor and Mr. Hilles should not be made permanent receivers is returnable.

Production, distribution and exhibition of Paramount pictures will not be affected either in the United States or abroad, according to a statement issued by Mr. Zukor immediately following the action. The subsidiary corporations are solvent and will continue in business as heretofore, Mr. Zukor said. He pointed out that the reason for the bankruptcy action was one of protection of all interests by conserving the company's assets by avoiding a multiplicity of lawsuits filed throughout the country subsequent to the receivership proceedings.

Petition Voted by Directors

At a meeting of the directorate of Paramount Publix Monday evening, at headquarters in New York, a resolution was made which declared that, although the company was in equity receivership, it was deemed to be in the best interests of all to go into bankruptcy, and Tuesday's action followed.

The schedule of assets and liabilities filed with the petition totaled more than 300 pages and listed, in addition to several hundred merchandise and service creditors, more than 1,000 holders of the company's 6 per cent and 5½ per cent bonds. These two issues, one for $13,512,652, and the other for $11,892,000, with notes issued by Film Production Corp. and indorsed and guaranteed by Paramount Publix, totaling $13,368,932 were listed as the principal liabilities. Another major liability was for $4,069,057 on mortgages and bonds guaranteed by Paramount Publix.

Mr. Zukor's statement said:

"Our board of directors decided at a meeting last night (Monday) that it would be more advantageous for the creditors and stockholders of Paramount Publix Corporation if the administration of its assets were carried on under the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court. The principal reason for this action is that it will insure a unified adminstration of the properties and will save great expense by avoiding a multiplicity of law suits in the many different states and countries in which the interests of the corporation lie.

DEVELOPMENTS IN RECEIVERSHIPS

Developments in receivership situations in the motion picture industry during the week were as follows:

Paramount Publix Corp. filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. Production, distribution subsidiaries were declared solvent and will continue as in present form, with theatre subsidiaries. Adolph Zukor and Charles D. Hilles continued as receivers. Plans to reorganize.

Herbert V. Jones appointed receiver for Fox Midland and Fox Rocky Mountain circuits.

San Francisco court to appoint board of trustees for Fox West Coast.

Receivers were making progress in reconstructing various circuit properties.

Percentage buying said to be favored by receivers operating circuit subsidiaries.

Minority suit filed at Wilmington against Warner Brothers Pictures.

Saenger and other circuits demanding new union wage scales.

Receivers throughout country agreed to effect further salary reductions, wherever possible, in conformity with new reduced salary scale ordered by large companies in New York.

Creditors of RKO Theatres Operating Corp. elected Irving Trust Company as trustee in bankruptcy.

Minority creditors filed action against Olympia Theatres at Boston.

Application made at Cincinnati that RKO Midwest, RKO Distributing, RKO Pathe, Keith-Albee Orpheum, B. F. Keith Corp., Cino Theatres and B. F. Keith, Columbus, be included in the local ancillary receivership recently set up for RKO.

Albert E. Reuben appointed trustee in bankruptcy for Publix-Ohio.

A. H. Blank elected trustee in bankruptcy for Nebraska circuits.

"This will have absolutely no effect upon the production, distribution and exhibition business now carried on under the Paramount name. These functions are carried on by independent subsidiary corporations. The production of pictures at Hollywood is carried on by Paramount Productions, Inc., an entirely solvent corporation. The distribution of pictures in the United States and abroad is carried on by Paramount Pictures Distributing Croporation and by Paramount International Corporation, both of which are solvent and will continue in business precisely as heretofore.

"The administration of theatres under the Paramount name is also carried on by independent subsidiary operating corporations. The business of these theatre corporations will also continue.

"It is our hope that it will be possible in the near future to offer to the creditors and stockholders of Paramount Publix Corporation a plan of reorganization."

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Paramount's branch manager of Portland, Ore., reported to the home office that one of his accounts, who runs a suburban theatre where the company's rental split is 33 1-3 per cent of the gross receipts, admitted three young men into his house upon the payment of one golf ball each. In making his settlement, the exhibitor turned over one golf ball to the exchange along with his check.

What with her thoughts flitting hither and yon, the wire dispatched by the young lady read: "Please send biological data on yourself as quickly as possible." She will probably get it.

Proclaiming its security and independence to patrons, a neighborhood theatre in New York's busy Bronx recently erected a sign, prominently displayed on the house front, which read: "We Have No Labor Troubles." Blazoned across the marquee, directly underneath, was the title of the current attraction: "Life Begins."

SYNTHETIC BRASSIERES AND SCHOOL TEACHERS

Billboards are wearing corsets in Tacoma. Sam Goldwyn's lovely girls in "The Kid from Spain" may appear in almost anything—or nothing—on the screen, but the Tacoma censors have them wearing white paper brassieres on the billboards.

And in Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, some youngster happened along before the paste was dry on a spicy "Kid from Spain" billboard advertisement, and ripped off the bottom strip, thereby exposing part of a religious poster which had previously been posted. The result was:

"In these days," according to Fred Quimby of Metro, "when executives are battling with economic problems, when the returns from feature percentage engagements aren't always what they're expected to be, the solid, substantial, dependable revenue from short features has a mighty important place in the scheme of things." Mr. Quimby proves his statement thusly: The average national feature rental is $15, or less. The average block-picture contract calls for 30 features for a season, or a total of $450. He says that's a pretty good figure. The seasonal sale of short subjects, which are not taken so seriously by many in the business, brings in about $725, at the rate of $7.50 each for 46 two-reelers; $4 each for 43 one-reelers, and $4 each for 52 news issues. Therefore, the short feature margin is $275 above the feature gross. The short feature sale is actually equivalent to the rental value of fifty features at $15.

Paramount Files Bankruptcy Plea

tions were granted at Kansas City by Federal Judge Albert L. Reeves, for Fox Rocky Mountain and Fox Midland companies. The court appointed Herbert V. Jones temporary receiver under bond of $200,000.

Combined action of both companies, which was said to have been caused by burdensome overhead and drastic admission reductions, followed local conferences with Spyros Skouras, Elmer C. Rhoden and other Fox executives in the territory.

Assets were listed at $12,000,000 and liabilities at $9,000,000, for both companies. Schedules will be filed late this week. Principal creditors of Midland are: Fox West Coast Service Corp., $1,900,000; Chase National Bank, $1,000,000; and for the Rocky Mountain division: Fox West Coast Service, $3,000,000, and Chase, $697,000. About 75 per cent of liabilities were said to be represented in these two creditors.

Sixty-three Kansas and Missouri houses are operated by Midland, and about 200 by the Rocky Mountain company, directly or through subsidiaries. Mr. Skouras would not comment on reoganization plans, in which Mr. Rhoden will participate with Receiver Jones.

F. C. Fisker and John F. Caskey, New York attorneys, prepared the papers with Wilson, Bundschu and Bailey, Kansas City attorneys. The court appointed Scarritt, Jones and North as counsel for the receiver.

Coincidentally, it was learned that Federal court of San Francisco was preparing to appoint a board of trustees for Fox West Coast, for which Charles P. Skouras and John Treanor were recently named receivers. Skouras and Treanor would be members of the new board.

At a preliminary meeting of Midwesco creditors in Milwaukee on Wednesday the court ordered all corporate records of Midwesco and three subsidiaries: Greenbay Amusement Enterprises, Jamesville Amusement Enterprises and Northwestern Amusement Enterprises, Inc., the court ordered all corporate records to be available for hearing March 30 to determine why only 14 theatres were held by Midwesco at the time of bankruptcy and over 26 other houses were turned over to Statewide Theatres, Inc., and Wisconsin Amusement Enterprises, Inc.

Suit Filed Against Warners

Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and others, were named defendants in a receivership petition filed Monday in the United States District Court at Wilmington, Del., by Max Goldberg, of Goldberg and Goldberg, attorneys of Salem, Mass. Others mentioned in the suit, filed through Hering & Morris, Wilmington solicitors for Goldberg, are: Harry M. Warner, president; Albert Warner, vice-president and treasurer; Waddill Catchings; Henry A. Rudkin; Jack L. Warner; Renraw, Inc.; George A. Quigley; Simon H. Fabian; Irving D. Rossheim; Abel Carey Thomas, secretary of the company and general counsel; Samuel E. Morris, a vice-president; Herman Starr; Goldman Sachs and Co., and McClure Jones & Co.

The complaint, containing some 86 pages, is quite involved, making numerous charges of malfeasance, extravagance and misconduct, and in general is an echo of the five-day annual meeting of the Warner corporation at Wilmington last December when Goldberg led a minority holders' fight and lost.

At a creditors' meeting at Toledo, Albert E. Reuben was elected trustee in bankruptcy for Publix-Ohio Theatres. Mr. Reuben had been temporary receiver.

Samuel J. Ginsberg, attorney of Cincinnati, representing a New York bondholder, applied in Federal Court at Cincinnati for an order to include B. F. Keith Corp., RKO Midwest Corp., RKO Distributing Corp., RKO Pathe, Keith-Albee Corp., Cino Theatres and B. F. Keith Corp., in the ancillary receivership which recently was named at Cincinnati for RKO. The order is answerable April 3.

The large corporations in New York are understood to have received word from the field this week that receivers for circuit subsidiaries will, wherever possible, order the industry's new salary scale into effect in operations under their control.

Receivers in New York and those in the field in charge of various circuit subsidiaries, were pressing demands made on union labor to effect new wage scale agreements. Typical was the order of Saenger circuit receivers in New Orleans that overtime be eliminated and wages reduced 40 per cent. Musicians, stage hands and projectionists are involved.

A unique arrangement was worked out in Houston by RKO and Publix. By virtue of a compromise agreement, the RKO Majestic and three Publix houses affected by receivership actions are paying union operators $150 for an entire booth staff, and $40 per week for one stage hand. Operators cut the booth personnel from four to two and an alternate, splitting the $150 three ways.

Creditors of RKO Theatres Operating Corp., which has seven houses in Connecticut, New Jersey and New York, met last week in the New York office of Referee Irwin Kurtz and appointed Irving Trust Company trustee in bankruptcy.

Meanwhile, reports from the field indicate that, despite complaints voiced previously by exhibitors against the practice, receivers in charge of the various subsidiaries in bankruptcy favor percentage buying of films, instead of flat rentals. They hold that they would rather not guarantee a certain sum on pictures which might not register at the box office.

An involuntary petition in bankruptcy was filed in Boston against Olympia Theatres, Inc. Plaintiffs are three creditors: Robert E. Noble, Adams, Mass., $500; John C. Gerst, Pittsfield, $250, and Elizabeth F. Mulgrew, Arlington, $1,000.

Wilbur Newton, receiver for Publix' Denver subsidiary Mountain States Theatres, closed the America at Colorado Springs and the Sterling, at Greeley. The closings are said to be temporary.

A. H. Blank on Tuesday was elected trustee in bankruptcy for Blank Nebraska circuits, at a meeting of creditors at Omaha.

Urges Regard for Chinese in Films

American-Chinese relations and American prestige in China could be put on a higher plane through the motion picture, if producing companies would develop a proper regard for the justifiable sensitiveness of the Chinese in connection with the way their customs, country, and institutions are depicted upon the screen, in the opinion of Julean Arnold, American commercial attache at Shanghai.

In a message to members of the industry, a copy of which may be obtained from the motion picture division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in Washington, Mr. Arnold points out that several erroneous portrayals of Chinese customs and manners have evoked severe criticism from Chinese who have witnessed them. Among the discrepancies noted are references to Chinese as "Chinamen," a term which they dislike intensely; depiction of Chinese wearing queues, which, as Mr. Arnold puts it, "are as scarce in China as snakes in Alaska"; a general use of "pidgin" English in cases where it never would be used, as it is the language only of uneducated persons speaking English, and a misconception of Chinese social caste. Mr. Arnold explains that there is no fixed aristocracy in China.

"Another misconception seems to be that every Chinese is a frequenter of an opium den or a gambling house, or in some way related to pirates and brigands. The latter are hardly more in evidence than racketeers in our country, and most Chinese have no contact with opium dens, or opium smoking institution," Mr. Arnold said.

Industry Helps In Quake Relief

Shaken slightly, but entirely undamaged as to physical property, the Hollywood motion picture community proceeded calmly about its production work and salary negotiations, after the first shock of the earthquake which devastated Long Beach, not far distant. While newsreel organizations, with their customary speed and efficiency, marshaled their forces to record for the people of the nation the details of the great disaster via the screen, several production companies rushed their huge kleig lights and floodlights to Long Beach by truck, supplying essential illumination through the night for the rescue work which went on feverishly. A committee of three named to aid exhibitors in the stricken area were Jack Brown of Warners, Mike Lewis of Paramount, and George Hickey of MGM, all district managers.

Only one death was recorded from among film ranks, that of James Brodie, 28, assistant manager of the Fox Imperial, in Los Angeles, who quieted the crowds rushing for the exits. When all had left safely, Mr. Brodie ran from the crumbling building. Too late, he was crushed to death in a shower of pouring bricks and mortar. Marion Davies placed the new and as yet uncompleted Marion Davies hospital at Sawtelle at the disposal of authorities for the care of injured.

Meetings of executives and stars discussing the salary arrangements made necessary by the banking holiday were temporarily halted when the earthquake rocked the buildings in which they were conferring. Players on sets rushed into the open at the first shocks but there were no injuries. Direct wires between New York and Hollywood were temporarily disrupted. Mrs. Danny Ahearn, wife of the screen writer, suffered minor injuries, and William Newberry, exploitation man for MGM, in Long Beach to arrange an opening, was reported in a serious condition. Theatres sustained heavy damage.

"Family Night" Value Indicated

The spread of the "Family Night" policy, regarded as of St. Louis origin, to the point where it has come into use nationally, was discussed at a recent luncheon in St. Louis, attended by members of the Better Film Council of St. Louis, theatre owners, exchange managers and independent distributors.

Friday, in the past considered a poor theatre night, has been developed until it has become one of the best nights for many neighborhood exhibitors in St. Louis, Fred Wehrenberg, president of MPTO of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, told the gathering. A return to, and maintenance of the single feature policy was urged on exhibitors by Mrs. A. F. Burt, chairman of the Better Films Council. Mrs. Burt paid tribute to the spirit of cooperation with the work of the Council evidenced by St. Louis exhibitors.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts, grossed by 119 houses in 20 major cities of the country for the calendar week ended March 11, 1933, equaled $1,092,495, a decrease of $171,715 from the previous calendar week, ended March 4, when 123 theatres in 20 cities totaled $1,264,210. No new high individual theatre record figures were established during the more recent period, while 18 new "lows" were recorded.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

> THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned. —THE EDITOR

Drama

Despite a pretentious cast, this life drama possesses entertainment value enough to constitute only a program picture. It tells the story of Daniel Pardway, who, arriving in Chicago immediately after the fire, starts a little retail business that after years develops into the city's greatest mercantile establishment. Assisted by Ullman, who applies business principles to Pardway's flamboyant optimism, it is early hinted that Pardway is building everything for his children.

Following the death of Abigail, after four children are born, the establishment waxes prosperous, endures depressions and grows in prestige. But the family, in whom Pardway placed so much hope, goes haywire. The eldest son, Gene, falls for the giggle water and the gilded women. Phoebe marries, divorces and marries again, to a no-account money-hunting foreign prince. Thane would rather be a window trimmer than a general manager. Freddie, after seducing one of the pretty girl clerks, tells his father he wants to be a bum and becomes a very successful one.

Only Ullman clings to the old ideals. When he approaches Pardway for a share in the institution that he actually has created, he is rebuffed, but he takes advantage of the whimsies of the children and buys the stock which their father has given them when they need dough.

The finale shows the entire family rounded up and Pardway berating the whole lot of them for the way in which they have let him down. As the old man apparently is about to die, only Freddie is beside him, and as the pair gaze out across the modern Chicago skyline and see the gigantic illuminated "Bazaar" sign, he vows he will try to carry on.

Main audience interest will be centered in the relations between Pardway and Ullman. They are the basis for all the drama and romance of accomplishment, and, paradoxically, the relation supplies all the comedy and most of the human interest. Knowing that the children are going to the dogs, there is comparatively little audience sympathy for them, the natural expectancy being that the old man will get rid of them at once and for all when they demonstrate their traits and will make some real arrangement for Ullman.

Next to Barrymore and Ratoff, a minor player, Helen Mack, won the only burst of applause from the preview audience. Her scene in Barrymore's office finely combines drama, pathos and human interest, topped off by a smash comedy punch as she accepts a $5,000 check in return for her betrayal.

Interest creating leads should be built around the theme, the accomplishment in building a great store, the pride Pardway has in his family, his disappointment, sympathy for Ullman.

Lacking glamour or vivid punch, there is little that will capture the interest of the younger element. Likewise the story is too heavy for juvenile appreciation.

The title permits some spontaneous catch lines that the children are just so much sweepings off the floor, most of it useless, but trash out of which one valued asset may be sifted.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Eleventh Commandment

(Allied)

Drama with Comedy

Built around the topical theme of a scheme of two unscrupulous lawyers to get control of a $50,000,000 estate, this picture combines drama, romance, comedy, menace, excitement and suspense in a manner that results in satisfactory entertainment. The setup sees Ross and Winters, erstwhile partners, taking every ethical and unethical legal advantage to gain control of the Bedell fortune. Ross, using his inside knowledge, is after a big share of the loot. Winters, introducing a number of phony heirs who provide the comedy relief, upsets his ambitions. Both, in turn, are put on the spot by the appearance of a legal claimant, Steager, an uncouth, vicious German knife thrower, who has been separated from Annie, but never divorced. It develops that Nina, whom Ross has been sheltering as his child, is really the daughter of Steager and Annie Bedell. Nina is engaged to the scion of an aristocratic family and Ross and Winters come together when they realize that if the world learned the identity of Nina's parents the knowledge would react to her disadvantage.

First stealing Steager's proofs, Winters later kills him as he makes a bold attempt to recover them. The finale sees Corinne, engaged to Winters, claiming that she is the girl Steager was talking about during a dramatic moment in the Ross library. The finish is written to the Ross-Winter imbroglio by an ingenious interpretation of the socalled Eleventh Commandment, "Thou Shalt Not Be Caught," as a basis for Steager's death and their own actions in seeking to come into control of the $50,000,000.

The title and interpretation have the ring that should stimulate patron interest in the production. The story is family type entertainment, offering the elements that interest both sexes from the juvenile age up. Taking advantage of the popular interest that accrued to the recent famous Wendel will case should arouse more than usual interest. The "Thou Shalt Not Be Caught" angle suggests ideas for timely exploitation. The cast presents more than its share of known box office names.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

(RKO Radio)

Drama

In this dramatic love story audience interest will be centered in a personality, Katharine Hepburn, more than anything else. The locale and characters are English. The plot, under modern treatment, follows an old theme. The eternal triangle, made more vivid by a romance between Monica (daughter of Christopher and Elaine) and Rawlinson, is completely dominated by the work of Cynthia. Some of the sequences are quite intimate. One, with bedroom dialogue, is almost certain to irk the ire of censors in certain quarters.

The story in brief: Strong, a middle aged married man, falls in love with young Cynthia. From just a pleasant interlude it develops into a fervid affair. Both fear it will get beyond their control. Audience sympathy is drawn to the wife, Elaine, as unknown to her this affair is going on, but she is disturbed by the growing attraction between her daughter, Monica, and a much divorced man, Rawlinson. Getting a vivid clue that the relation between her husband and Cynthia is more than platonic, she lives in hope that her husband will get wise to himself before it is too late.

Cynthia, wanting to break off the liaison, embarks on an airplane race around the world. Strong is in New York as she wins the event. The affair is on again in all its intensity as the party returns to England, where the now respectable Monica and Rawlinson catch them in a clandestine meeting. Upbraided by Monica,

Cynthia decides to work her own way out. After intimating to Strong that she is to have a baby, she takes off on an altitude record flight and deliberately commits suicide by removing her oxygen helmet when she is several miles up in the air.

"Christopher Strong" comes under the classification of a sophisticated picture. Thereby its appeal is limited to the class rather than the mass of patrons. Those who appreciate screen artistry will find plenty to please them in Katharine Hepburn. She more than makes good all the promise she showed in "Bill of Divorcement." When she is off scene the picture tends to almost dullness. Naturally she should be the big angle to feature in this show, not only for the interest she will draw to it, but the more she is sold in connection with it the stronger her draw will be in future appearances.

Supplementing the Hepburn appeal, other cast names should be used for all they are worth, with Billie Burke as an angle to capture the interest of the more mature patrons. Billing it as a modern story of modern people; stressing the triangle set-up; the drama, romance, sympathy for Elaine, and selling it as an adult attraction that has absolutely no interest for juveniles, may bring it up into the average box office classification.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

(Warner)

Musical Comedy-Drama

Strictly speaking, the long-heralded "42nd Street" of the Brothers Warner is not a musical comedy, a musical revue transplanted to the screen or a general extravaganza in the full sense of that very far-reaching term. The picture is rather a dramatic, highly entertaining story of backstage, but a backstage story as it rarely has been done before.

Nothing has been spared to impart to this comedy drama an elaborateness far surpassing expectation, and most precedent. When the backstage story dictates that at this point shall be seen the musical show as a finished product, the picture gives, with no neglect of detail, the musical show as a finished product. In those sequences the film becomes a musical show on the screen, but still there penetrates the drama which is behind the show, the heartbreak, the slavery of rehearsing day and night, the strain—and, often enough, the humor, the comedy of the moment.

Warner has done exceedingly well by the novel which was authored by Bradford Ropes, from which the picture was adapted. And Warner has done exceedingly well for the exhibitor at large. For the exhibitor here has something to sell with a capital "S." No stodgy, half-hearted attempt is this, but a bounding, swinging, vitally alive and often highly dramatic story, imbedded in the atmosphere of its setting, the tinsel and tawdriness, the big-heartedness and ballyhoo which is show business. Above all, the picture is entertainment, entertainment from the opening shot to the final closeup (89 minutes later), which incidentally is not a clinch. Warner, in its unusual and well-executed ballyhoo, the "42nd Street Special," has formed a large, ready-made audience for the picture from coast to coast.

It is a tale of the show business, with Warner Baxter, famed as a stage manager of musicals, determined to put on his last show, despite a weakened physical condition, and then retire. The story carries the show from the signing of contracts to the gala and finally successful opening—through weeks of slaving and drama. Bebe Daniels is the show's star, Guy Kibbe the show's angel, with Dick Powell, appealing and good-voiced, as the juvenile, and Una Merkel and Ginger Rogers, two show girls who add much in detail to the picture.

Ruby Keeler, as the young girl in her first show, who steps in at the last moment to play the lead when Miss Daniels breaks an ankle, dances well, is attractive and extremely appealing. The screen audience will without question take her to its heart, enjoy her every minute on the screen. Baxter, carrying much of the heavy drama of the piece, plays splendidly. George E. Stone as assistant to Baxter does his bit well, as do all of the lengthy cast.

The "show" is put on in splendid style, the chorus attractive, the routines good, the camera's angled shots unusual, and the musical numbers, particularly "42nd Street" and "Shufflin' Off to Buffalo," being highly entertaining, possessed of attractive melody. The exhibitor may well ballyhoo this to the sky as real entertainment, a dramatic backstage story, well told, girls and music, both attractive, with several star names of good box office caliber. With the audience pre-sold to a great extent, it should not be difficult to make the ledger smile.—Aaronson, New York.

Mussolini Speaks

Pictorial Record

Certain definite credit must be accorded Columbia Pictures, and likewise Jack Cohn, executive, who was concerned in the preparation of this record, for having presented, in live and lively form, a pictorial compilation of that which has been wrought in Italy under the hand of that genius of personality and leadership who was born Benito Mussolini, son of a laborer, and has become Il Duce, the leader.

That he and his accomplishments must take their place in history there can be no slightest doubt. Consequently this motion picture record, as of 1933, is important, worthy of government archive incarceration for the generations of the future who will read of this Mussolini and his work.

From the standpoint, more prosaic, but at this moment definitely more important, of the motion picture exhibitor and the merchandising of this picture to a public, there are several factors which should result in a fairly sizable return on the showman's rental dollar. Signor Mussolini is, with but slight lapses, almost continuously a major part of the headlines of the daily press. This man, who forms cabinets, appoints ministers, and then proceeds to all intents and purposes to be that cabinet and those ministers, is a phenomenon of modern governmental history, and as such is deserving, along those lines, of extensive ballyhoo.

There is at all times an underlying public desire to know just what manner of man this is, and here is a splendid opportunity to find out. It is true that this material is necessarily much in the nature of newsreel content, that it has no narrative form, as such. However, it is an active, interesting and vital record, dominated by the dynamic personality of Mussolini.

The film is roughly divided into two major portions. The first, briefly, by means of a flitting camera, supplies the background of Il Duce. Seen are his birthplace, scenes of his younger years prior to the famed march on Rome. The remainder of the production, and by far the greater part, pictures Mussolini on the occasion of the 10th anniversary of that fateful day, addressing a vast concourse of enthusiastic people from a balcony in Milan. Dynamically, while the sound apparatus records his every word, Il Duce reviews the accomplishments of his regime, points to the current problems, reaches into the future.

As his address veers from one phase to another of his people's welfare, the flashback, in significant scenes, indicates what has been accomplished in the particular field. Throughout Lowell Thomas clearly, concisely explains, elaborates in accompanying dialogue, during the address actually translating particularly pertinent passages.

Of course, the film in a sense might be called propaganda, but that need make little difference in the selling of it. It is an interesting, almost at times exciting document, of ready appeal through community groups and schools, and unusual, different, important, should find the intelligent portion of the public, at least, waiting to learn directly of Signor Benito Mussolini, and what he has accomplished. This will stand ballyhoo. In fact, it asks for it.—Aaronson, New York.

A Columbia picture. Described and interpreted by Lowell Thomas. New York release date, March 10, 1933. Running time, 76 minutes.

Men Must Fight

(MGM)

Drama

In the adaptation of the quite capable stage play of the same name, which played Broadway some time ago, MGM developed a story rather inconclusive, swerving as it does from a point of view strongly pacifist to a ringing exposition of the necessity for strong national defense. The story, having its beginning in the latter days of the World War, swings in one breath to 1940 and the imminent, and then actual war of the United States with the mythical country of Eurasia.

The production, as it stands, is a drama of mother love primarily, with the attendant elements, strongly emphasized and having a direct bearing on the central theme, of patriotism on the one hand and a sharp individual struggle to preserve intact an ideal of pacifism against the terrific opposition engendered by the invasion of the country by a foreign foe.

The picture is distinguished chiefly by the remarkably able and poignant performance of Diana Wynyard, late of the English stage and screen, who very definitely made her mark in "Cavalcade." Her name is of course not particularly well known to the patronage of the average exhibitor, yet he may make much of it through her recently splendid work as indicated, and her performance here definitely is deserving of top billing, marquee splash. The audience, in all probability, will leave the theatre talking of her and her work, and consequently selling her on top should be valuable as a build-up for future appearance. Supporting her with his usual ability is Lewis Stone, while others include Phillips Holmes, May Robson, Ruth Selwyn, Hedda Hopper.

Miss Wynyard's lover is killed in his first scouting flight, and she marries Stone, older than herself, at his insistence, to give her child a name. Then to 1940, with the son, Holmes, a pacifist through the training of his mother, and Stone the secretary of state. War with Eurasia threatens, Miss Wynyard holds pacifist rallies, and Holmes, when he refuses to enlist, alienates the affections of Stone for himself and his mother, and loses his fiancee, Miss Selwyn.

The mother fights to keep her son from the ravages of war, of which she knows so much, but finally, driven by a patriotic zeal before which his ideals collapse, he enlists, joins the air force, and flies overhead, while a mother and a sweetheart watch him go. Unfortunately, for popular consumption, the picture ends on a note of approaching tragedy, but it is rather fine drama, possessing the most basic of all appeals, mother love. The position in which Stone finds himself with respect to his wife and the son he has come to look upon as his own, lends an opportunity for selling lines which should draw equally the masculine portion of the patronage. Looking into the future, seeing war as it may be again, makes for powerful copy. An air raid over New York, with the Empire State Building spectacularly crumbling, adds an exciting moment.—AARONSON, New York.

Heritage of the Desert

(Paramount)

Western

Herein is reasonably good western picture material, containing a sizable amount of the customary action, horses, blazing guns and magnificent mountain scenery. Aiding materially in selling this picture to the western film-goer is its origin, it being the screen adaptation of Zane Grey's extremely popular novel of the same title.

The story is neither much better nor any worse than the mine-run of western stories, and therein emphasizing the Zane Grey authorship is important. Many thousands have undoubtedly read this.

The rustler gang which has terrorized the country, the determined rancher who refuses to relinquish his property to the marauding outlaws, the pretty girl who is the ward of that rancher—all these phases are represented. Strengthening materially the picture as a whole are the performances of Farrell Macdonald as the strong-willed fighting rancher, and David Landau as the nefarious outlaw gang leader. Both are good marquee names for this type of film. Heading the cast, and handling the romantic phase of the story, are Randolph Scott, surveyor, and Sally Blane, Macdonald's ward. Comedy is supplied by Vincent Barnett, jack-of-all work at the ranch.

The romance between Scott and Miss Blane, who is engaged to Gordon Westcott, Macdonald's son, and actually in league with Landau, develops when Scott is stranded in the desert by Landau and is rescued by Miss Blane. Eventually it all comes out, right side up, but not until a gun battle or two has its spot on the screen, and a rousing rough and tumble scrap in a saloon occupies attention.

The youngsters, of course, will stand up shouting, and to them the best appeal may be directed. The oldsters who have a warm spot still for the western film should be attracted by the title and its connection with the author, Zane Grey, as well as by the appearance of David Landau and Farrell Macdonald.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Henry Hathaway. From the novel by Zane Grey. Screen play by Harold Schumate and Frank Partos. Photographed by Archie Stout. Release date, September 30, 1932. Running time, 59 minutes.

Obey the Law

(Columbia)

Drama

A moderate amount of simple entertainment potentiality is inherent in the screen material which went into the making of "Obey the Law." Lacking anything elaborate, in settings, story development or significance, and adaptable more particularly to the smaller theatre in the lesser community, the film is nevertheless active and entertaining in content and feeling.

For the marquee there is Leo Carrillo, Italian-accented, appealing and often, in this case, amusing through his expert mishandling of the English language in his lines. Supporting him ably are the ever-attractive little Dickie Moore, Lois Wilson, Henry Clive and Eddie Garr, currently a hit on the Broadway musical comedy stage, a fact which imparts to his name a selling quality it would not otherwise possess. He gives a brief mimicry of Groucho Marx which provides an amusing moment.

Carrillo, in a neighborhood closely resembling New York's East Side, is a barber whose chief interest in life is the acquisition of American citizenship in this great country. He is, at the same time, something of a good samaritan of the dilapidated neighborhood, dispensing good cheer with each shave, and a friend particularly of the youngsters, among whom is Dickie Moore. When a young man, Garr, attempts to hold him up, he buys him food, goes home with him instead of having him arrested. The man has a sister, Miss Wilson, whose son is Dickie, and of course Carrillo falls in love with the sister.

Through the brother, for whom he finds a job, Carrillo becomes involved with the local political machine, of which Henry Clive is the big and not too scrupulous "boss," and whose true character he later exposes.

The fact that the film contrives to be entertaining, in a measure amusing, and generally satisfactory of its limited type, is chiefly as a result of the work of Carrillo. Sell the picture as a story of a ring-smashing Italian barber, who believes in his country and the "right thing," make a good deal of Carrillo, Miss Wilson and Dickie Moore, and indicate that the family may come to the theatre.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Benjamin Stoloff. Assistant directors, Sam Katzman and Lester Neilson. Story by Harry Sauber. Screen play by Arthur Caesar. Cameraman, Joseph Valentine. Sound engineer, Dean Daily. Release date, January 20, 1933. Running time, 69 minutes.

Yes, Mr. Brown

(United Artists)

Comedy with Music

While this picture was in the early stages of production in a British studio, United Artists took a gamble with it and booked it for the American market.

Ever since he made a success in "Monte Carlo" Jack Buchanan has been trying hard to parallel that, but in each instance has entirely overlooked the essential factor of the directing behind the camera in that production. The result already has been seen in "Man of Mayfair" and "Magic Night," and I am terribly afraid that this one will go the same way. There's little in it; a couple of catchy songs, perhaps, but no perceptible story, no humor and no originality.

But because it's the stuff that doesn't call for any intelligence on the part of the audience, it's possible it may go over with unsophisticated patrons of the type who are not nourished on a diet of "Trader Horns" or "Cavalcades." The plot concerns one Nicky Baumann, manager of a Viennese toyshop, of which Mr. Brown of America (if you please!) is boss. When Mr. Brown comes to Vienna there is a mixup because he mistakes Baumann's secretary for his wife. As Brown falls hard for the secretary and as Mrs. (or should it be Frau?) Baumann is not a party to the deception, it looks as if Nicky will get the air instead of the partnership he wants. But somehow he doesn't and it's all hunky-dory again, and that's all there is to it.

If Buchanan's name stands for anything with your customers you might lead with it, but otherwise there's nothing in that line for the marquee. You can gag the title, maybe, and plug the tunes.—CHARMAN, London.

Produced by British & Dominions and to be distributed by United Artists. Directed by Jack Buchanan. Adapted from the German play, "Geschafte mit Amerika," of Paul Frank and Ludwig Hirschfeld. Dialogue, adaptation and lyrics by Douglas Furber. Photography by F. A. Young. Art direction by L. P. Williams. Assistant direction by G. Boothby. Recording by L. E. Overton. Editing by M. Hankinson. Friederike

(Kinematrade)

Drama with Music

Woven with a fine hand, having a measure of beauty, this all-German production tells a dramatic story, tells it well, and utilizes numerous melodic bits, in addition to the appropriate background score, which are rendered in a manner not unpleasant, though at times they appear to have been inserted with rather little justification.

In the tranquil, often beautiful setting of a small German village, is recounted the story of the great love of Germany's famed Johann Wolfgang Goethe for a charming miss, Friederike, daughter of a parson, and the manner in which she renounces her love that Goethe might avail himself of an opportunity to become secretary of education, a post which he may take only if he comes unencumbered. Seeing the necessity for drastic action, Friederike feigns annoyance at his presence after he had refused the post, desiring Friederike and freedom, and he, angry, hurt, rides off to the fame that destiny had decreed should be his lot. The girl, broken-hearted, watches his carriage fade into the distance, knowing she has lost a lover, hardly compensated by the thought of having given a genius to his country.

The exhibitor who can readily expect a percentage of German audience, who can appreciate the film without the aid of subtitle translations of the wholly German dialogue, may promise a wholesome, romantic and at the same time dramatic story of love and renunciation. Mady Christians and Hans Heinz Bollman, both possessed of good singing voices, who play the leads, may not be well known to the audience, but they are effective, perform ably. The supporting cast is quite capable, while the film has been well mounted, with full advantage having been taken of the excellent scenic effects at the disposal of the director.

The music is pleasant, melodious, adding much to the effectiveness of the picture as a whole. Fat, jovial Otto Wallburg, as Bollman's best friend, supplies much of humor, many comic moments through his fondness for the bottle. The audience, particularly that part of it which understands the German language, should be well entertained.—AARONSON, New York.

SPECIAL TRAIN CARRIES '42d STREET' TO RECORD

Holdovers of Warner Picture a Regular Occurrence, Despite Bank Holidays, Earthquake; Grosses Exceeding "Fugitive"

Warners' "42nd Street" special is speeding back to the Coast after a 16-day trip across the continent, making scores of stops and carrying the picture to unusual grosses due to the comprehensive exploitation achievement of S. Charles Einfeld, in charge of advertising and publicity.

Despite the bank holiday and even the California earthquake the special stirred up unusual public interest that has been reflected at the box offices.

Record Weeks

Almost from the first day the project translated itself into increased theatre attendance. The first big stop—and that for only four hours—was Denver, but long before that, through California, New Mexico and Arizona, crowds greeted the seven-car gold and silver train with its ten stars and dozen "42nd Street Beauties." Then Denver. Greeted by the governor of Colorado, the mayor of Denver, and civic leaders. The picture opened at the Orpheum to record business, a capacity week, and then another big first-run week at the Aladdin. In the meanwhile the train had gone on to Kansas City, and at the Newman theatre the picture held over for a second week.

Indianapolis was reached the day the newspapers announced the closing of the banks in the state. But a mighty business was reported for the picture, opening at the Circle theatre. And so on, along the entire route. Chicago, Cleveland, Toledo, Pittsburgh, Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Boston and New York.

By this time all banks were closed but from other points in the United States, from Texas, Tennessee, Wisconsin, Upper New York State came the reports of extra attendances preparing the way for release date openings.

The Box Office Reports

Briefly here is what "42nd Street" already has done at the box office:

In New York, following the premiere, the Strand has been opening its doors at 9 a. m. and has been running extra midnight shows with a second and third week assured.

In Memphis, at the Warner, it held over for three days; in Kansas City, a second week at the Newman; in San Diego, despite earthquakes, Lou Metzger reported that at the New Spreckles theatre the picture grossed the biggest day's business since he took over the house. In Albany at the Stanley, the picture began with a midnight premiere and emergency box-offices were opened. In Bridgeport, it held over at the Cameo, likewise at the Strand in Hartford, the Stanley in Philadelphia, the Lake in Cleveland, in addition to playing a full week at the Uptown and Variety; it held over in Akron at the Strand; in Cincinnati at the Keith; in Indianapolis at the Circle. In Pittsburgh, after a week at the Stanley, the picture moved over to the Warner; in Buffalo, it took a second week at the Great Lakes theatre. It ran eight days at the St. Louis Ambassador and eleven days at the Empire in San Antonio.

The Warner home office says the grosses are running far ahead of the business done by "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang" and "Silver Dollar." Philadelphia reported fully 50 per cent greater business than done with "Fugitive." In Denver the Orpheum with eight days doubled the "Fugitive" gross. In six days at the Warner Memphis, the musical hit outgrossed the Muni hit by 55 per cent. In St. Louis, "42nd Street" ran more than double "Silver Dollar," which had held the high mark for two years. San Antonio was 100 per cent higher than "Fugitive."

New York Stars to Appear At Benefit for Own Needy

B. S. Moss, chairman of the administrative committee of the Citizens' Committee in Aid of Stage Relief Fund, has arranged for many stars of stage, screen, opera and radio, to assist needy members of the professions by appearing at the Metropolitan Opera House at a benefit Sunday evening, March 26.

Mr. Moss said nearly every artist in New York has expressed a desire to cooperate with the Citizens' Committee, of which Jay F. Carlisle is president and Dewees W. Dilworth treasurer.

Special features are being prepared by George Kaufman, Howard Dietz, Morris Ryskind, Henry Souvaine and Russell Crouse. Boxes already have been subscribed for by two dozen prominent persons.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 164.—(A) Why is it utterly impossible to be sure of making a perfect splice without the use of locating pins, or in fact without a good film splicer? (B) What effect or effects will be produced if film cement is left exposed to the air? (C) Tell us just how you keep your cement from contact with the air. (No ghost stories, please, gentlemen!) (D) How often do you think it necessary to inspect film to guard against loosening of splices?

Answer to Question No. 157

Bluebook School Question No. 157 was: (A) In a motion picture theatre just what are termed emergency lights? (B) What are the dimensions of film? (C) Tell us just why it is important to excellence in results that film be of uniform, unvarying thickness. (D) When film is new, what part of it is easily susceptible to damage? (E) What fault of adjustment will tend to increase such damage?

During the past weeks many new "students" have joined the "school." We welcome them, trusting they will remain with us through the entire course.

This week the following answered all questions sufficiently well to be listed as correct:

C. Rau and S. Evans, Lester Borst, G. E. Doe, J. Wentworth, Dale Danielson, T. Van Vaulkenburg, K. Dowling, H. Edwards, J. E. Raynor, W. Ostrum, A. E. Wyatt and R. E. Baiss, R. K. Wayland, P. W. Edwards, J. E. Bliven, W. Broadbent, H. B. Coates and D. Coates, H. D. Schofield, J. Cermak, Nic Granby, L. B. Bryant and D. L. Monehan, K. L. Knight and M. Henderson, W. Love and W. D. Love, F. Ferguson and D. Lalley, K. Griener, D. R. Peters and D. Holler, M. H. Longerger, P. R. Fox, D. Kurts and S. Howard, L. N. Traxler, W. R. Lemke, U. L. Tipton, L. Thomas and D. D. Davis, T. L. Sampson, J. B. Buckley and D. Singleton, T. M. Vinson, L. F. Blane, R. Schuler and R. Wheeler, F. L. Granby, F. Harlor and G. Harrison, L. D. Rubin and M. Gregg, T. Turk, N. McGuire, T. H. Morton and F. B. Klar, J. B. Nalley and M. D. Olewon, L. D. Simmons, J. R. Duncan and S. D. Pendor, R. O. Tanner and M. R. Davidson, D. L. Blinkendorfer, D. T. Arlen and M. Spencer, D. Little and J. H. Rathburn, T. McGruder, G. Tinlin, J. Williams and O. Allbright, R. L. Mitchel, B. Jones and D. K. Ormie, H. D. Tyler, B. L. Banning and L. Jones, F. and J. L. Hanson, F. F. Franks, D. Goldberg and L. Hutch, D. D. Davis and L. Thomas, O. L. Davis and R. Simms, F. L. Granby, N. Tipton, L. M. Richards, D. Breaston and D. Haber, J. Lansing and R. D. Oberleigh, D. L. Sinklow, D. V. Peterson, M. Henderson, B. L. Tanner and E. Rymer, D. U. Granger and son, R. G. Patterson, L. Grant and R. Geddings, G. Thompson and D. Michelson.

Out of more than two dozen good answers to Section A, I have selected for publication that of R. K. Wayland of Albuquerque, N. M., because he is a new "student" and answers concisely. He says:

"Emergency lights in a motion picture theatre is the term applied to those lights which designate and illuminate all emergency exits. The term includes all lights which are used in signs designating the exit, all lights used in and outside the building to illuminate the passage properly. Most cities require that emergency lights be wired on a separate circuit and have their own meter loop and outside service."

(B) Dale Danielson has by far the most complete answer to this one. He says, "As to the question, 'What are the dimensions of films,' I take it you do not mean all the different dimension films, but of the film we deal with: i. e., the 35-mm. film. The dimensions are:

"Total width—1.37795 in. maximum: 1.37598 in. minimum; 1.377 inches.

"Edge of film to sprocket holes—.079 in. x 2 equals .158 inch; width of sprocket holes, .110 inch by 2 equals .220 inch; width between sprocket holes, .999 inch equals .999 inch. Total 1.377 inches.

"Distance from edge of film to inside edge of sprocket holes—.189 inch equals .079 inch plus .110 inch equals .189 inch.

"Height of sprocket holes—.078 inch.

"Corners rounded with an arc on a radius of .0195 inch.

"The distance between center and center of two successive sprocket holes is .187 inch." I wrote the Eastman Kodak Company to see if there was any later information, but it was the same as above given, although not so complete. It was as follows: Width of film edge to edge, 35 mm.

"Center of perforation to center of perforation—28.169 mm.

"Distance between perforation holes—25.375 mm.

"Size of perforation—2.79 mm. wide; 1.85 mm. high (negative); 1.98 mm. high (positive)."

(C) I believe Brother T. Van Vaulkenburg does this one up pretty brown. He says, "Experience has demonstrated film .0065 of an inch thick to give most satisfactory results. Film of less thickness not only will not stand the rough usage to which film is more or less subjected as well as will that of above named thickness, but also it is more apt not to lie perfectly flat over the aperture under all conditions met with. Moreover its sprocket hole edges have not the thickness necessary to stand up well under the abrasion and strain to which sprocket hole edges are subjected. Thin film also is more susceptible to damage in process of rewinding than is the heavier stock. Theoretically, too, any change in film thickness results in a change in braking pressure of aperture tension shoes. Unquestionably it does, too, but since the change is in thousandths of an inch it may be doubted that this has much practical effect. Of course with over-thick film the tension actually would be heavier, and with too-thin film it would be less than it should be, but the change is so very slight that I believe it amounts to little."

An interesting point. I am inclined to think Friend Van Vaulkenburg has the right idea. With a tension such as projectors are equipped with, what practical difference would, say .002 thousandths of an inch in thickness make?

(D) Concerning this one Rau and Evans say, "The part of new film most susceptible to damage is the emulsion, because of the fact that it is 'green,' or in other words still soft. For this reason most prints are now waxed or processed before release. After the film has been used for a time the emulsion becomes seasoned. It then is hard and far less likely to be damaged."

(E) Lester Borst says, "Too much aperture or gate tension inclines the new, soft emulsion to adhere to the tension shoes. Too light take-up tension may cause the film to be rewound loosely, with the result that it will slip on itself in the process of rewinding, or else tempt the projectionist to 'pull down,' with resultant scratching of the emulsion surface. Also, a faulty upper magazine reel tension may cause jerking and slipping of the film roll layers upon each other."

JENKINS' COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

DEAR HERALD:

We believe that the prize medal should be awarded to Mr. Samuel Goldwyn, an executive of United Artists, for the frankness and boldness of his statements as given in an interview published in the February 25 issue of this magazine. If you have not already read this interview in the Herald, go back and read this over again.

Mr. Goldwyn's statements regarding production costs are not new, they have been known for years. The industry has been censored time and time again by the public for its extravagance in the production of motion pictures. There has been a universal cry from exhibitors for better pictures at lower costs that they might play their product at a profit. The news in Mr. Goldwyn's statements is that he has been bold enough to make them publicly.

Not only is it known that production costs are too high and clear out of all reason, but these costs have been unnecessarily publicized. It has been nothing uncommon for a press agent to say publicly that a certain picture cost $750,000 or even $1,000,000 to produce when anyone with the brains of a tadpole knows that it didn't cost the half of it and shouldn't have cost the third of it. This business has been burdened with too much press agent hooey which has soured on the public stomach.

Stars will work on a picture for eight or ten weeks and then go to Europe for a two months' "rest," and somebody is paying the expense, presumably the public, but that presumption is not altogether correct; the exhibitors pay the bill in the first instance and then if they can't collect it from the public it is just their hard luck.

Broadway and Hollywood are not the best vantage points from which to get the proper slant on the ailments of the box offices. Would you know the proper answer? Get out and mingle with thousands of communities and thousands of exhibitors, as the writer has, and then you will realize to some extent what's wrong with the business.

Mr. Goldwyn says that the stars are getting so much money that it makes them lazy. We might pause right here to inquire of Mr. Goldwyn just who is responsible for that condition. Certainly not the public, and most certainly not the exhibitors. There is no other business institution in the world where they pay their help so much money that they become "lazy." Gosh, that isn't what makes us lazy.

There have been over five thousand theatres closed within the past three years. Some producers argue that those theatres were a liability rather than an asset. To say that the weekly receipts from five thousand theatres is a liability proves a state of mind that we have surmised all along but don't care to state.

They will make an excellent picture and then follow it with a dozen salacious and sophisticated pictures. They will make another fine production and follow it with a dozen gangsters, and yet they can't understand what's the matter with the business. It would seem that good pictures ought eventually to prove something; we believe in time it will. This business is bound to survive. It is a long ways from being wrecked but it is some distance from being what it could be and what it would be by a full and complete understanding of what the public desires in entertainment. Good, wholesome pictures is the answer. Let's have more of them.

We note a number of new names in "What the Picture Did For Me," which proves the growing importance of that department. There ought to be more. There will be in time.

The Herald says that Colvin Brown "has returned from a Democratic fishing trip at Miami, Florida."

We have always known that there were lots of democratic fish and that they had ravenous appetites, but we had presumed that Mr. Brown's piscatorial propensities ran rather more to trout and black bass. Guess we will have to give him some instructions.

Comes now one C. S. McDowell of Buffalo, Okla., and accuses us of having a single-track mind and that our steering gear on our tin Lizzie must be locked, since we have never called on him. He also says that the jackrabbits of Oklahoma are much larger than they are in Nebraska.

We don't mind his saying that we have a single-track mind, others have made the same statement and proved it, but by gosh when he refers to April Shower, our perfectly good Chrysler, as a "Tin Lizzie" we are going to call out the marines and declare an embargo on Buffalo, Oklahoma.

His statement that the jackrabbits are much larger down there than they are up here is probably true, since they eat burros down there and think they are jackrabbits, but our "jacks" up here taste just like spring chicken, although, personally we'd as soon eat a carp.

Since Mac is evidently getting the Herald, we are assuming that Buffalo has a post office, and the next time we visit Oklahoma we will try and look the town up in the postal directory and go and call on him, for there's a guy we would like to meet. He sounds like a regular fellow.

It beats all what memories some exhibitors have. Last June we called on the Rees boys, who operate the Gem theatre in Plymouth, Indiana. At that time their subscription to the Herald didn't expire until this present February, but they asked us for our address and said they would send their renewal to us when the subscription expired. Did they do it? They did yesterday. You can always depend on those Hoosiers to do just what they say—that it, some of 'em. One Hoosier told us once she would go to a show with us but when we went to get her we found she had already gone with a Norwegian Sucker from Illinois, but she didn't live in Plymouth.

About the best way we can spend an evening is to pick up the Herald and read the reports on pictures in "What the Picture Did For Me" by the exhibitors. Perhaps this is especially interesting to us because we know personally practically all of them from Pennsylvania to the Pacific and their names certainly look good to us. But there are still a lot of familiar names that do not appear in this department. Some exhibitors are awfully lazy. They should break themselves of this habit; it might grow on 'em.

The ducks have started north, the robins are here, and now where in the dickens did we put our fishing outfit?

FROM COLYUM TO COLUMN

Now look what "Jaysee" Jenkins is doing. Seems that now he's begun captivating the hearts of the newspapers' screen writers. Read this from Bess Whitehead Scott's column, "Tipping You Off," in the Houston Post:

> "There is a genial gentleman (we nearly said old gentleman) somewhere in the vicinity of Neligh, Neb., whom we feel sure it would be a pleasure to know. We know him fairly well wondering if he is really as nice as he writes.
> "His name is J. C. Jenkins, and he calls himself the Herald's 'Vagabond Columnist.' The Herald calls him 'Jaysee.' His comments are always interesting, sometimes inspiring, many times rich with effortless humor, and better than all—right down our alley maybe, after reading his rambling column of comments on this and that in the Motion Picture Herald for some two or three years. But we can't help when it comes to opinions on pictures. For Jaysee is one of those persons who is genially tolerant, never pedantic, and at the same time believes that innate decency and natural good taste should be the rules to hold stage and picture entertainment within its rightful bounds. He hails clever wit and real ability with a warm and expansive approbation, and he scorns smut as such with a pen no less caustic because it is free from venom.
> "Jaysee wanders around over these United States, and reports to his magazine the troubles and trials and likewise the joys of the moving picture exhibitors. And he never misses an opportunity for a fishing bout, whatever the location; and maybe that explains the pleasantly indulgent tone of his writings. Fishermen are never persons to worry over unimportant things. Yes, we'd like to meet Jaysee, and wonder why he never wanders down our way where fishing is our best sport, both fresh and salt water varieties."

There follows an extended quoting of "Jaysee's" recent dissertation on Technocracy.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Allied

THE STOKER· Monte Blue, Dorothy Burgess—A good story by Peter B. Kyne, but only a fair picture due to poor direction. Dialogue does not suit the players. Picture starts out as a winner but dies as the story progresses. Some scenes poor, needs backing and sound bad. Played Mar. 1-2. Running time, 65 minutes.—William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Small town patronage.

Columbia

AIR HOSTESS: Evalyn Knapp, James Murray, Thelma Todd—Didn't expect much on this after reading unfavorable reports, but it turned out to be the best grosser in the last four months. Some of the acting isn't so good, but the majority were well pleased and the last reel was exciting enough to make the whole show good.—H. H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

THE BITTER TEA OF GENERAL YEN: Barbara Stanwyck, Nils Asther—Very good picture of its kind. Columbia is delivering very good pictures and they help the exhibitor put the picture over. The trailer they furnished me free was a great help putting this picture over. More success to Columbia. Played Mar. 5-6. Running time, 85 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

MAN AGAINST WOMAN: Jack Holt—Jack Holt plays a detective in this one and is real good, too. It will please. Played Feb. 10-11. Running time, 68 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Ala. General patronage.

NIGHT MAYOR: Lee Tracy, Evalyn Knapp—Very good, with plenty of wisecracks.—H. H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

NO MORE ORCHIDS: Carole Lombard—This is a right good picture for grownups, but no good for kids. Played Feb. 24-25. Running time, 68 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Ala. General patronage.

NO MORE ORCHIDS: Carole Lombard, Louise Closser Hale—A very clever picture. They will especially like Louise Closser Hale. What a grand dowager she is. Every picture that we show her in, they like her better. She contributes to the comedy and along with some snappy dialogue. The story moves at a fast pace. Essentially romance, but not too sophisticated for a small town.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SO THIS IS AFRICA: Wheeler and Woolsey—Hey-Hey—Hays (a coupla hays and a big one for Will). Naughty-Naughty and then "some." You can always figure these W-W boys will carry plenty of "spice" but this time it's hotter than hot. Mrs. Wheeler's little Bertie is naughtier than ever, and as for Bobbie Woolsey, well it's no wonder our famous neighboring city, "Bloody Herrin," became so unruly after little Robert left his native town. However, despite the "raw" cracks they seemed to laugh aplenty, so maybe Will Hays can close one eye. Besides it drew well in face of the first day of our nation-wide bank moratorium. Is my face red??? Played Mar. 5-6. Running time, 62 minutes.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

SUNDOWN RIDER: Buck Jones—This is a good Buck Jones western with plenty of action. Great for kids. Played Mar. 3-4. Running time, 64 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre. Gallatin, Ala. General patronage.

WASHINGTON MERRY GO ROUND: Lee Tracy, Constance Cummings—This was as popular a show as we have run for a long, long time. Tracy certainly keeps the show pepped up. Columbia is doing very well so far.—H. H. Gates. Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

First Division

THE BIG DRIVE: Here is a thrilling historical record of the World War full of thrills and highly interesting. Compiled together by A. L. Rule. The scenes were actually photographed at the front by cameramen from various governments. Many veterans recognized their division in action. Men well pleased but few women came. Business above average. Played Mar. 6-7-8. Running time, 85 minutes. —William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Small town patronage.

First National

BLONDIE JOHNSON: Joan Blondell—Another good little picture from First National. Not so very big, but none of them are overgrown nowadays. Will please most any crowd and Joan Blondell is just about the whole show. Business is just about average on all pictures at the present time. Played Mar. 4. Running time, 63 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

IN this, the exhibitor's own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York .

Fox

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—This is the best picture Clara Bow ever made and my patrons liked the picture fine. Played Feb. 19-20. Running time, 72 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

CONGORILLA: Made by Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—Plenty appeal, fine jungle stuff, good biz. Too much repetition of other African pictures. Played Feb. 22.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—This is the first time we ever had a walkout on Rogers, and yet two or three people said it was the best he ever made. The box office report said Rogers seems to be losing ground fast. Played Feb. 20-21. Running time, 73 minutes.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

THE FIRST YEAR: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Nothing like the drawing power of their previous pictures. It pleased only moderately well. Running time, 80 minutes.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

GOLDEN WEST: George O'Brien—Very good action picture. Fox pictures so far have been very good. Played Feb. 5-6. Running time, 68 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

HOT PEPPER: Victor McLaglen, Edmund Lowe, Lupe Velez—Fox made "Cock-Eyed World" with this pair and every picture since that time follows the same lines. It is not often that a producer gets into the cycle rut, but that is just what Fox has done with this pair. Frankly, there is no difference in dialogue much from what all the others have been. Just a little different plot. It is about time to bury Flagg and Quirt and I will help buy the rough box. A lot of raw dialogue and must have been directed by an amateur. The public is fed up with this pair if the business done is any criterion. There is not a new idea in the picture. Flagg and Quirt have done the same thing in every picture. Even Paramount fell for the same line in "Guilty as Hell."—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tracy, Joan Bennett This one is full of wisecracks. Plenty of comedy. Played Feb. 21-22. Running time, 72 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Ala. General patronage.

SMOKE LIGHTNING: George O'Brien in another Zane Grey story that carries action aplenty and is clean entertainment. Not so good at box office. Running time, 58 minutes.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

STATE FAIR: Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor—Boys! If there ever was a natural, this one is it. The best picture from any company this year, and how the patrons enjoyed it. I messed up the playing arrangement by only showing it two days and then lost the second night by a hard rain storm. It will stand up for extended runs in any theatre. Bill Rogers was very generous in this picture. He gave everyone in the cast a chance and all did their part well. It's your golden opportunity to start your patrons coming back. Hope you have better breaks in the weather than I had. Played Feb. 23-24. Running time, 100 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—A good program picture. Not as good as "The First Year." Nowadays nothing makes money at the box office. Played Feb. 19-20-21. Running time, 78 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—This is a good picture, clean, and for the whole family, but I do not like reissues. We rarely have any success with them, and I am of the opinion that the only reason that this one was the exception is that it had Janet Gaynor in it. I have had so many that were brought back and remade in sound that failed at the box office that I am happy to say that the picture did above average business in the midweek run. It has been my experience that not one in five that are resurrected will do it. Running time, 76 minutes.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—The best of the Rogers' pictures. Good clean entertainment for the whole family. The tempo of the whole production seems a little slow, but that serves to carry out the easy going, slow moving character role portrayed by Rogers. Well liked by our patrons, who generally do not respond to the pictures of this star. Business average. Played Feb. 26-27-28. Running time, 78 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—Will Rogers does the tramp stuff. O. K. Lots of laughs. Patrons liked this picture fine. Played Feb. 5-6. Running time, 70 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

WILD GIRL: Joan Bennett, Charles Farrell—Good entertainment from start to finish. Played Jan. 29-30-31. Running time, 78 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

YOUNG AMERICA: Spencer Tracy—We used this to start off a new serial and gave a five cent matinee for all school children. We couldn't have found a more splendid picture for the youngsters as well as one that also holds interest of adults. It's old but well worth playing if you have passed it up. Played Jan. 11-12. Running time, 70 minutes.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MGM

BLONDE OF THE FOLLIES: Marion Davies—Very good. Marion Davies does wonderful acting in this. Played Jan. 7-8-9. Running time, 89 minutes. —P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines, Cliff Edwards, Madge Evans—One of the biggest surprises of the season. Drew above average business on a single day's run. Photography is fine, with some wonderful speed boat racing. Some thought it was a little noisy.—Howard B. Schuessler, LaFayette and Martin Theatres, La Fayette, Ala. Small town patronage.

THE MASK OF FU MANCHU: Boris Karloff—The folks seem to be fed up on this type of oriental stuff. Worst Saturday's business in several weeks. Did not please 50 per cent.—Howard B. Schuessler, LaFayette and Martin Theatres, LaFayette, Ala. Small town patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler, Polly Moran—Consider this the best picture this team yet made, though it failed to get business as I ran it during the bank holidays. Pleased those that saw it about 95 per cent.—Howard B. Schuessler, LaFayette and Martin Theatres, LaFayette, Ala. Small town patronage.

RED DUST: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow—Your patrons know this plot by heart, but this picture will interest them because of these stars. Either one alone is box office, but together they are one swell "pull." It's the old tropic drama, with some tropical dialogue that makes it not for kids. Pleased most of our patrons and business was above average. Played Feb. 22-23-24. Running time, 86 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

THE SECRET OF MADAME BLANCHE: Irene Dunne, Phillips Holmes—Very good picture. Irene Dunne does a fine bit of acting. Story not new, but very interesting. Failed to draw at box office, but no fault of picture. Good for Sunday, but not so good for children.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Illinois.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Norma Shearer—Excellent entertainment. Give us more like it. Played Jan. 15-16-17. Running time, 90 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

Paramount

THE BIG BROADCAST: All-star—Splendid entertainment for young and old. Pleased and drew some extra business. Played Feb. 26-27. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

THE DEVIL IS DRIVING: Edmund Lowe, Wynne Gibson—Here is one that is full of spills. It gives the fine points on the car stealing racket. Played Feb. 28-Mar. 1. Running time, 70 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Ala. General patronage.

HE LEARNED ABOUT WOMEN: Stuart Erwin—An average program picture, fast moving but overloaded with dialogue. A few comical situations, but the laughs depend on rather forced situations. O. K. for double bill. Below average business. Played Feb. 17-18. Running time, 68 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

HE LEARNED ABOUT WOMEN: Stuart Erwin—This Stuart Erwin sure is some wow in this. Plenty of laughs. Pleased old and young. Played Feb. 14-15. Running time, 72 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Ala. General patronage.

HELL TO HEAVEN: Carole Lombard, Jack Oakie Nice entertaining picture, but bad flop at B. O. Guess the title gave the impression it was a helluva picture. Mighty nice entertainment if you can get them in. Played Feb. 26-27.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll—Too bad Paramount stuck such a title on this picture, for it is unsuitable and poor box office. Nothing big about this one, but it is well acted and satisfies. Played on a double bill, it went over well, and while it is not exactly for the kids, yet there is nothing in it too objectonable for them. Played Feb. 25. Running time, 73 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll—Just the kind of picture of every day life that we want more of. Cold weather spoiled attendance on this, but it was enthusiastically enjoyed by everybody who did come. Please, Paramount, give us more like this and "Night of June 13." Played Feb. 24-25. Running time, 73 minutes.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll, Cary Grant—A very pleasing program picture. Rather poor title to my mind. Business average. Played Jan. 14-15.—C. W. Bennett, Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

HUCKLEBERRY FINN: Jackie Coogan, Junior Durkin—The kids ate it up. Grownups also enjoyed it. Good box office. Played Feb. 17.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: All star—Some parts of this one were good but they overdone the drunk in this, but patrons will be pleased. Played Feb. 12-13. Running time, 90 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Ala. General patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: Gary Cooper—A great picture and the last episode at the old ladies home was especially good. It drew very well and pleased everyone except a few who had read the book. It has a wonderful cast. Played Feb. 6-7. Running time, 95 minutes.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: Gary Cooper, Wynne Gibson—This picture will please the most critical. It is a very out-of-ordinary picture, having about ten different stories in one. The very pleasing thing about the picture is its ending, having the old-folks romance, whch is quite remote from the hot stuff in most pictures today. Recording very good. Played Dec. 31-Jan. 1.—C. W. Bennett, Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

A LADY'S PROFESSION: Alison Skipworth, Sari Maritza—Personally I wasn't sold on this one, but patrons seemed to enjoy it immensely. Sort of a comedy drama, with a story that is fair. Failed to draw the usual two day business. Played Feb. 7-8. Running time, 63 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

MADAME BUTTERFLY: Sylvia Sidney, Gary Grant—This is a very good show but it didn't draw so well for me. Played Feb. 26-27. Running time, 88 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN: Jack Oakie, Marian Nixon—A good small town picture. Plenty of action, good story. Recording good. Played to poor business but no fault of picture. Paramount is coming through with very fine product this year, and are a very fair minded bunch, too. They don't want the keys. Played Dec. 24-25.—C. W. Bennett, Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

MONKEY BUSINESS: Four Marx Brothers—Funny as a whole. So many silly situations to spoil the good spots. Played Feb. 24.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

THE MYSTERIOUS RIDER: Kent Taylor, Lona Andre—Good out-of-door picture from a Zane Grey tale. Young stars do good work. Played Mar. 3-4. Six reels.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

TWO LITTLE LETTERS—AND A REPORT

"Three little words" have done lots of things, we all know. But one or two little letters can do just as much. To wit: Mrs. E. D. Hilsinger of the Library Opera House at Marathon, N. Y., reported upon "Secrets of the French Police" as being "different and therefore refreshing to patrons satiated with sappy love histrionics." Lo and behold, it appeared as "satisfied with snappy love histrionics." And Edward Robinson's laugh in "Silver Dollar" appeared as "inane" to Mrs. Hilsinger, but as "insane" in the issue. Typography, what errors are committed in thy name!

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—Don't make a mistake and show this one two nights, because the second night you will probably be in jail and won't have anyone to run your show. I ran it on Saturday night and hid out all day, Sunday, so got by all O. K. It's plenty rough; not for kids or Sunday. Played Feb. 25. Running time, 63 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

WILD HORSE MESA: Randolph Scott—This is an unusually good Zane Grey, we thought. Our folks like Randolph Scott and hope Paramount will keep him busy for a long time. Good box office reports on this. Played Feb. 17-18.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RKO

ANIMAL KINGDOM: Ann Harding, Leslie Howard—Liberty's reviewer gave this four stars. If nine reels of subtle, sophisticated conversation merits four stars, all right. As entertainment this deserved one-half star. Splendid acting by principals, aided by Myrna Loy, but all about nothing—and they talked and talked. Another stage play gone wrong because not suitable for adaptation. Considerable dirt. Not suitable for young children. Played Mar. 5-6. Nine reels.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

BIRD OF PARADISE: Joel McCrea, Dolores Del Rio—A very beautiful production, marvelous scenery and fine musical background throughout the picture. No suggestive stuff in the picture, even though they dress very close to nature. The last part a little warm, but it won't offend. Drew extra business. Played Jan. 21-22.—C. W. Bennett, Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Wheeler and Woolsey—If this won't please and make them laugh, they're too far gone. Not only do Woolsey and Wheeler do their stuff, but what comedy from Edna May Oliver and Edgar Kennedy. Only fair business. Played it too old.—C. W. Bennett, Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green—Every other picture of this type has been a flop for us. When this one came along we figured a one day run on a double bill, which was too bad for us, for the S. R. O. sign had to be dusted off and hung up before we had gotten a good start. Pulled kids and adults alike and seemed to please all. Crowds far above average, but the box office not so good. Too many children taking up the seats we could have sold to adults turned away. Played Feb. 25. Running time, 70 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green, Buster Phelps—This drew both the children and adults in a very satisfactory manner and pleased very well—H. H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

MEN OF AMERICA: Bill Boyd, Dorothy Wilson—Good action picture, with comedy and romance. Pleased Friday and Saturday crowds. Played Feb. 24-25. Running time, 75 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

PENGUIN POOL MURDER: Edna May Oliver, James Gleason, Robert Armstrong—This show pleased O. K., but the title would not draw them in, just as I anticipated.—H. H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

ROCKABYE: Constance Bennett—This is not the type of role Bennett fans like to see her in, and were it not for a strong supporting cast in Paul Lukas, Joel McCrea, Jobyna Howland (she's a wow), and a mighty cute youngster who nearly steals the picture, it would have been a flop. Opinion divided, some liking it, and others not. Did not do nearly the business we enjoy on most Bennett pictures. Played Feb. 17-18. Running time, 75 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

THIRTEEN WOMEN: Irene Dunne, Gregory Ratoff—A rather unusual story, but was not well liked.—H. H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

United Artists

MAGIC NIGHT: Jack Buchanan—This picture failed to please and was the biggest flop at the box office in months. Why bring these English-made pictures into this country when we already have enough lemons. Did not compare with Paramount's "Monte Carlo" of a few seasons back. Lay off this one.—Howard B. Schuessler, LaFayette and Martin Theatres, LaFayette, Ala. Small town patronage.

Universal

THE COHENS AND KELLYS IN HOLLYWOOD: George Sidney, Charlie Murray—These used to be funny but they've worn out their welcome. Played Feb. 10.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

LAUGHTER IN HELL: Pat O'Brien, Tom Brown, Gloria Stuart—Good picture of its kind. Chain gang stories appeal only to men and kids. Women very disappointed. Played Feb. 23-24. Running time, 67 minutes.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres—So many people object to sad endings that the second night's business was almost nothing. Yet those who did come felt they had seen a real picture. Personally, I was proud to show it.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres—So much on the gangster, fell flat at the box office. Played Feb. 26-27. Running time, 78 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

THE OLD DARK HOUSE: Boris Karloff—Here's a picture we should profit in shelving. They tried to make it a horror type and succeeded only in turning out a thoroughly silly affair. Business below average and though we double billed it, it far offset any pulling power the feature may have had. Not for kids. Played Feb. 17-18. Running time, 75 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart—A picture that has everything for entertainment. A laugh a minute and especially good for Saturday run. Played Saturday, Feb. 18.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

TOM BROWN OF CULVER: Tom Brown—This was our Washington Birthday special and it was a good one at that, or any other time. Any time you want something special for your children, get this. I found that the grownups liked it, too. Played Feb. 22-23.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville—Drew the largest Sunday crowd for some time. Lots of laughs. Feb. 19-20.—Mrs. Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts, Roland Young—They liked it and it is a great little picture with Pitts waving her hands and in her dumb way putting the picture over. There is only one Zasu and there is Roland Young that we do not see in many pictures but our audiences are strong for this clever actor. If you have ever seen him in a slightly inebriated role you will never forget him. Why he does not get more roles we do not know but this I do know that we see the audience settle back and we know that they will get some laughs when he appears. He has that something that not many actors have.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Warner

HAUNTED GOLD: John Wayne, Shelia Terry—A peach of a western packed with laughs and thrills, with mystery as a center. Acting and direction neatly done. Sound good. Blue Washington steals the picture away from John Wayne. Played Mar. 3-4. Running time, 50 minutes.—William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Small town patronage.

I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG: Paul Muni—The theme of this picture makes it of more interest to men than to women. But all will agree that Muni gives a wonderful performance, and whether or not it can be called entertaining, it brings home, and very vividly so, the evils of the chain gang system. Its timeliness makes it box office. Business above average and our patrons on the whole liked it. Played Feb. 19-20-21. Running time, 92 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

MYSTERY OF THE WAX MUSEUM: Lionel Atwill, Fay Wray—Unusually fine picture. All in color and pretty to look at. Well acted and will prove entertaining in most any theatre. The only drawback —you'll have to work hard to get them in. Glenda Farrell and Fay Wray both are good. Played Mar. 2-3. Running time, 71 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

STRANGER IN TOWN: "Chic" Sale, Ann Dvorak—Here is a genuine small town picture. Not a special, but just fine entertainment, with comedy, action, and a sweet romance. It will please 100 per cent.—C. W. Bennett, Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

World Wide

THE DEATH KISS: Adrienne Ames, Bella Lugosi—A very interesting mystery. Keeps the patrons in suspense until the last scene. Acting at its best. Smoothly directed by Edward L. Marin. Some novel ideas as the flash of a gun tinted to give a red effect and flash light beam yellow make it all the more exciting for a chase in the dark. Recording well balanced. Fair business against strong competition. Can be run any day in week. Played Feb. 27-28. Running time, 70 minutes.—William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Small town patronage.

FALSE FACES: Lowell Sherman, Lila Lee—Only a fair program picture that fell flat at the box office. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

THE BAD GENIUS: Scrappy—Good. Got a lot of laughs. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

BIRDS OF A FEATHER: Silly Symphony—A cartoon that is outstanding. A chicken hawk scoops down and steals a small chicken from a mother hen. The sparrows are called out to go into flying formation and bombard the hawk until he releases the baby chicken. All this cleverly done to good music makes this cartoon one of the very best we have ever used. One reel.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BIRTHDAY PARTY: Mickey Mouse—Good. The music is good. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

BLACK SHEEP: Scrappy—Very good. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

THE PICNIC: Mickey Mouse—Very good. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS: Hollywood stars—Okay novelty of studio stars at play and away from work. Always liked by most of my patrons. Especially real fans enjoy them. Running time, 9 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

SEEING STARS: Krazy Kat—This is one of the best cartoons we have played. If your patrons like cartoons you can't go wrong on any of these Mickey Mouse, Scrappy and Krazy Kat. They are all very good. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

SNOW TIME: Krazy Kat—Good. Running time, 6 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

TRAFFIC TROUBLES: Very ordinary cartoon. One reel.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WOLF AT THE DOOR: Scrappy—Very good cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

Educational

KEYHOLE KATIE: Gale Seabrook, John T. Murray—One of the poorest two-reel comedies I ever saw, not a laugh in a carload of this kind. Sure hope they never make another like it. Running time, 20 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill.

WOODLAND: Cartoon—A clever reel, above the average. Running time, 7 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

YOUNG ONIONS: No excuse for this waste of film. Running time, 18 minutes.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont.

MGM

BRING 'EM BACK A WIFE: Taxi Boys—One of the old fashioned belly laughers. Best we have had in many a day. Running time, 2 reels.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va.

BRING 'EM BACK A WIFE: A good slapstick comedy.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

FREE EATS: Our Gang: Will especially please the kids, and usual laughs to it for the children, not so for the adults. Running time, 18 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PREMIER: Boy, what an eye-feast. Positively one of the most beautiful color pictures ever turned out. Tuneful, novel and entertaining. Lots of dough tied up in this. Thanx Metro.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill.

LAD AN' A LAMP, A: Our Gang—Just about the sweetest of all Gang comedies. The monk in this one steals the picture. Big kids howled at this one too.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill.

MR. BRIDE: Charley Chase—A funy two-reeler. Not Chase's best but it is very good.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MUSIC BOX: Laurel and Hardy—Very funny piano movers this time and they again use the same slope of stairs used some time ago in handling

SHOWMEN! WHAT DO YOU WANT?

Mr. Exhibitor, are you giving your patrons a diversified screen program? Or just throwing in a few shorts for good measure? If you are one of the exhibitors who cashed in on the silent series of "Nick Carter" detective pictures, you will be interested to know that this famous detective of fiction is returning to the screen.

Not in the usual gangster type of picture, however. Nor as a slick sly professor of crime! This Nick Carter is a two-fisted young man of wit and education, of refinement and courage, a brilliant detective whom criminals fear because they know his relentless hatred of their vicious craft. Nick Carter is a character who has thrilled two generations. In the series now in preparation he will transfer his adventures to the talking picture in stories that will win you, Mr. Exhibitor, the support of every high-minded parent, the educator and the civic organization.

Whether or not you presented "Nick Carter" in silent form, you will want to show every one in this talking picture group. And in order to understand just how these productions may best meet your program needs, the organization now preparing the series urges every exhibitor to fill out and mail the coupon below—at the earliest possible moment.

OVER THE COUNTER: As pretty as anything that you will run and with two scenes that are kinda rough cut out will please them all. We showed it to the "old timers" at a free matinee and they had to lead 'em out.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

THEIR FIRST MISTAKE: Laurel and Hardy—Plenty of fun and got a lot of laughs.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

THEIR FIRST MISTAKE: Laurel and Hardy—About as funny as the depression.—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Neb. General patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP'S CRAZY INVENTIONS: Cartoon—Very good. Running time, 7 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

BETTY BOOP'S KER-CHOO: Cartoon—Fair cartoon. Not good not bad.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BLUE OF THE NIGHT: Bing Crosby—Good comedy, and Bing sings, so that makes it better for those who like him. Running time, 21 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

HAWAIIAN FANTASY: Vincent Lopez—This is a very clever act by Lopez and his orchestra. A one reeler. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Ala. General patronage.

HAWAIIAN FANTASY: Vincent Lopez—Very interesting short. Beautiful scenes and wonderful singing.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Pa.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE No. 2: Stuart Erwin—Well liked and usually get to see someone that will entertain. Print on this terrible and consequently poor sound.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

ROMANTIC MELODIES: This screen song with the "Street Singer" and Betty Boop is one of the best and they can sing the songs, for once.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SCHOOL DAYS: Screen song—Combination singing and cartoon. Singing by children and was enjoyed by our patrons.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SCREEN SOUVENIRS NO. 1: Especially good. Some fine historical shots, and an early "Uncle Tom's Cabin" production that is a riot of laughs. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

SCREEN SOUVENIRS No. 4: These are great favorites with our patrons and this particular one is fine. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

WRESTLER'S BRIDE: Fairly good. Two reels.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

YOU'RE DRIVING ME CRAZY: The bouncing balls have all been good but this one.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont.

RKO

CHARLIE CHAPLIN COMEDIES: These go over O. K. with most of the people but wish they would standardize the prints in respect to frame lines.—H. H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

THE MAGIC MUMMY: Cartoon—Good cartoon addition to any program. Excellent short for a midnight show.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THE MILLIONAIRE CAT: Clark and McCullough—Rowdy farce that pleased the crowd. Running time, 20 minutes.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich.

MICKEY'S GOOD DEEDS: Mickey Mouse cartoon—Very funny.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Universal

KID GLOVE KISSES: Slim Summerville—A splendid Saturday night comedy causing plenty of laughter. Two reels.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

THE STREET SINGER: Arthur Tracy—Steve Farrar of Harrisburg, Ill., was right when he reported this a "dud." Again I repeat the recording on these Universal Radio shorts is bad. Tracy can sing, can't act and needs a hair-cut badly.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill.

UNION WAGES: Louise Fazenda—Quite funny with lots of old time slapstick and some wisecracking. A plumber in the house of the accommodating but very much dumbbell type. Running time, 18 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

YOO HOO: Jimmy Gleason—this is as bad a comedy or rather so lacking in comedy qualifications you could easily compare it with the "Brevities" Universal puts out. If this ever helped any program for entertainment value, try running pickles through your machine. They will be cheaper and at least give your patrons the proper "sour" flavor. Running time, 17 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre. Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

PICKING A WINNER: Broadway Brevity—Musical novelty with settings outdoors. Has an adagio act in it of three people dressed as jockeys that is the hit of the short. A pleasing short to help any program into class A entertainment. Running time, 17 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

THE YACHT PARTY: Roger Wolf Kahn—A Melody Master short. Clever musical numbers and settings aboard ship. There's a dancer in it that will make folks gasp in wonderment. Never seen a dance like it. Running time, 8 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

Serials

Mascot

HURRICANE EXPRESS: John Wayne, Shirley Grey—On the fourth chapter this stacks up pretty well. This girl Shirley Grey isn't hard to look at, and she acts like a regular trouper. We are pleased to note that recently she has been given a chance in big time stuff. 12 Episodes.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich.

Universal

JUNGLE MYSTERY: Tom Tyler—We are on our eighth chapter of this serial and it is going nicely.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

THE JUNGLE MYSTERY: Tom Tyler—Just finished the last chapter of this splendid serial. It held up well and was liked very much. You may think serials a little old fashioned but the chances are you could increase your patronage by playing a good one. I did.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

THE LOST SPECIAL: Frank Albertson—This serial is packing them in. I consider it a life saver and one of the best serials for all classes of trade that I have shown. It brings them back and say that is what us little fellows have to have.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garner, Okla. General patronage.

Theatres Stand By Empire State Union

Despite reported withdrawal of Arthur Farkash as president of Empire State Union and Joseph Black, business agent, Greater New York exhibitors holding contracts with the union deny they intend to sign with Operators Local 306. Joseph Tepperman, attorney, is expected to be a leader in rearrangement of the Empire State organization. All Springer and Cocalis projectionists agreed to remain with Empire State Union.

Local 306 is planning a reclassification of scales. All houses in "A" class will be placed on an identical scale and all "B" theatres will pay one scale regardless of competition.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

REPORTERS WANTED!

AL ZIMBALIST'S newsy and intimate column about New Jersey showmen and their doings has become so popular that we're broadcasting an appeal for more regional correspondents to contribute a bi-monthly column. . . . We would like to have representation from every section of the country . . but these correspondents must be members who get a chance to circulate around their territory so as to be able to pick up newsy items about the different showmen they encounter.

If more than one request comes from any one particular section we will either accept the first one who wants the honorary title or pool the material. . . . But we want Round Table Reporters and we want them right now. . . . Come on boys . . whose gonna be the first to try and trump Al's New Jersey Go-getters? . . .

BOUQUETS!

TO FRANKEL'S United Theatre Ad Mat service which makes it so easy for smart managers to duplicate the snappy and seat-selling newspaper ads of their key-city brothers. . . . Showmen who are interested ought to drop Frankel a line. . . . Maybe this is what you need. . . .

TO HARRY RUBIN for as keen an appreciation of what's what in projection as we've ever had the privilege of finding out . . and . . future events casting their shadows ahead . . or sumpin that sounds like that . . we want you to know that we gleaned a lot from Harry that should make swell copy for the boys around the Round Table. . . . Unless . . you're one of dem guys wot can't loin nuthin' atall . . then . . we're all wasting our time chinning wit youse. . . .

TO PAT (POICY-WIL) McGUIRE of International Projector (free ad) fame whose activities in promoting greater understanding and interest in things projectional . . have carved for Pat (Poicy-wil) a niche in the hall of fame. . . . It's just too durned bad that some guys won't get to learn a whole lot more about their projection booth than they do. . . . Maybe that's why some managers are . . . real managers . . . while others are just . . . keepers-of-the-keys-to-the-cup-machine. . . . Keep up the good work Pat. . . . (Poicy-wil.) . . . You'll get your reward in Heaven. . . .

TO DICK KIRSCHBAUM . . for his loyalty in sticking with us through these many years and contributing such a swell series of cartoons as he does week-in and week-out under the now familiar title of "Lobby Laffs" . . and also to Guy Jones . . Lou Sylvester . . Bill Gray . . and a few others who have also helped keep our pages interesting from the brighter side of life. . . .

TO MARCUS GRIFFIN . . the Old Master . . whose "Broadwayfarer" has become one of the best columns on the great white way . . and for no reason at all . . has branched hissenself out into the field of authors. . . . Now if the bug would only bite me I could get started on that "masterpiece" . . (the Greeks have a better word for it). . . .

TO BARRET McCORMICK for one of the year's best press books on "King Kong" . . wotta book . . wotta book . . even if you never intend to play the pix you should have a copy for the swell color printing. . . . But . . seriously . . here is one of the real ticket-selling press books of the year . . and if you can't make dough with "King Kong" aided and abetted by McCormick's efforts to make the task easier . . then perhaps that peddling job ought to be looked into. . . . But keep on making them up, Barret . . there are plenty of real showmen who appreciate real suggestions . . and especially good newspaper ad material which is always in great demand in those thousands of spots where the newpaper happens to be the chief medium for show-selling. . . .

TO H. B. FRANKLIN . . for keeping a cool . . level head while the greater majority of the rest of the theatre crowd are running around crazy. . . . And lissen H. B. . . that ossif of yours got us . . yep . . it was the only place where we found we could relax . . so how about renting us a little two by four corner near that fire-place . . we promise not to annoy you during business hours . . and just think boys . . no telephone bells to wake us up. . . . When H. B. gets a call the red light flashes on his desk. . . . Wot a dump . . wot a dump. . . . But the only objection we have is . . the funniest parade of muggs are always running into that ossif . . sort of reminds one of circus day back home. . . .

TO MYSELF . . for knowing that it's time to stop this chatter and go out to see a movie . . good or indifferent . . and for an hour or so we won't have to listen to all the croaking about salary-cuts . . bank openings . . or what have you . . or maybe you're like us . . you have nothing . . oh well, let it pass. . . . GEORGE MILLER USED UNITED STATES MAP FOR "42ND ST." GAG

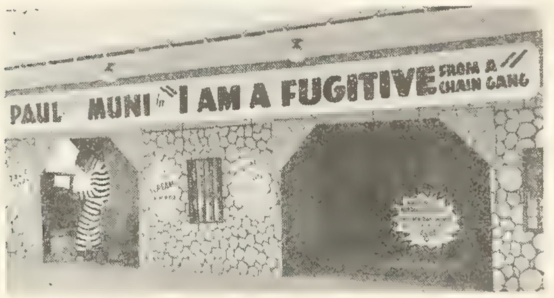
To keep his patrons interested in the forthcoming picture "42nd Street", George Miller, manager of Smalley's Hamilton Theatre, Hamilton, N. Y., used a cost-free gag that obtained a lot of worthwhile publicity. It merely consisted of hanging up a big U. S. map in the theatre lobby and following the "42nd Street" exploitation train as it moved across the States. Colored ribbons were used to denote location. Stills of players and the train rounded out the display.

Miller has built up a fine "requested" mailing list the past several months by various methods, among which were ads in 10 rural papers with coupon to mail in for programs; a two-for-one offer distributed in out-of-town territory; use of request coupon in regular programs and the return post card system of checking up on mailing lists.

We're glad to get in touch with George Miller again and to note that everything is going along nicely with his link of the William Smalley chain. He used to be a more consistent contributor to this department in the past and now that he's back again on the active list, maybe we can count on more show selling news from his section of New York State.

MASON CONSTRUCTED STRIKING FRONT ON CHAIN GANG PICTURE

The strikingly attractive front on "I Am a Fugitive" pictured here was made by L. J. Mason, manager of the Palace Theatre, McAllen, Texas, and on account of its size does not by any mean do justice to it. The inside of the lobby is too dark to reproduce, but the same idea was carried out with the box office and interior, which extends to a depth of 40 feet from the front.



Salvaged one-by-fours and three rolls of ordinary red roofing paper did the job and entire cost, including painting and construction, came to $14. We have Mason's word for it that the front attracted more attention than any he has used over a period of 12 years, causing plenty of comment and aiding materially in doubling average gross during engagement of the picture. Note the convict cut-out and pile of stones in one entrance and the attractive selling copy. One of the signs read: "Watch the crowds as they come out—Women with tears in their eyes—Men ready to fight."

We don't doubt for one moment that Mason's $14 investment was one of the best ones he ever made and it all goes to show what a little ingenuity can accomplish. Thanks to him for passing along the information and we'll hope to hear more about what's going on at the Palace.

MAURICE CORKERY IS ANOTHER TO CASH IN ON "BUY AMERICAN"

Another Round Tabler to cash in on the "Buy American" movement publicized by a large newspaper organization in a nationwide campaign was Maurice Corkery, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Boston, Mass.

The caption under a three column photo in the "Boston Evening American" showing Maurice pinning campaign buttons on several citizens stated that the Capitol was the first theatre in the country to sponsor a special performance dedicated to the "Buy American" movement. Fifteen hundred children attended the show and recited a pledge to support the move. All were given buttons to advertise the occasion.

That many managers are taking advantage of the campaign to tie-up with merchants, etc., is evidenced in current mails reaching Club headquarters, and reports indicate that most merchants are receptive to the idea of joining in newspaper and other advertising efforts to further the "Buy at Home" idea.

FRIED CONTINUES TO GRAB FRONT PAGE OF NEIGHBORHOOD SHEET

Through the medium of Monty MacLevy, former publicity director of the Randforce Circuit, Brooklyn, and now general-managing three fine theatres in Queens, L. I., we learn that Sam Fried, in charge of the Parthenon Theatre, Ridgewood section of Brooklyn, is still grabbing a lot of front page publicity in his neighborhood newspaper.

And when we use the word grab we mean just that. Holy cats! What Sam has got on that newspaper we don't know anything about but you all can take our word for it that he gets away with murder as far as free space is concerned. And as far as we know, he doesn't own an interest in the sheet, either.

NEW MEMBER AVECE WALDRON SENDS US REPORT FROM OKLA.

When we listed Avece T. Waldron, manager of the Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla., among the Club's recently elected new members, it was stated that a couple of stunts this showwoman used to good advantage would be later reported upon. Here they are:

To focus attention on an action picture (western) a suit of overalls was stuffed with paper and rags, using five flesh-colored stockings from the Five and Ten for head, arms and legs. Old gloves and shoes were attached for hands and feet, features painted on the head and a straw hat pinned on. Late at night the dummy was hanged to a tree limb anchored to the marquee, in imitation of an old time western "necktie" party. Mrs. Waldron claims the stunt brought in almost two-thirds over average trade and that the exhibit stopped traffic many times.

As a means of producing results week in and out she believes the kiddie's Saturday matinee at 5 and 10 cents is one of the best policies a small, independently operated house can follow, despite the fact that this practice may be frowned upon by producers and operators of producer-owned houses. Taking into consideration the wildly enthusiastic response from the youngsters impresses her with the thought that anyone overlooking this angle of show business is missing a great opportunity to cash in later on, because of the pronounced habit kiddies have of growing up.

Like Mr. and Mrs. Tom Edwards over in Missouri, Mrs. Waldron and her husband are geting by nicely in show business despite tough times. She manages the theatre and her lord and master (?) disributes film for Universal in Oklahoma City. We draw the comparison between the Edwardses and Waldrons because like Mrs. Waldron, Mrs. Connie Edwards runs a theatre while Tom Edwards peddles films. Apparently these combinations work out to mutual advantage.

MADDEN VIES WITH KOHEN FOR UNIQUE EXPLOITATION GAG

Not long ago we awarded one of the Club's mythical medals for unique window displays to Spitzer "Barnum" Kohen on occasion of some exploitation he did in connection with "Goona Goona" and now along comes word that J. J. "Spot" Madden, manager of the Granby, down in Norfolk, Va., pulled the same stunt on the same picture.

Should you recall the former story, it will be remembered that a live, well upholstered female model stood in a department store window and displayed the latest things in step-ins and brassieres, with a sign alongside stating that "if the lovely Goona Goona maidens wore the gadgets they'd choose the same kind featured by the Miss Goona Goona in the window." The sign further cautioned observers not to "Miss Goona Goona" at the local theatre. The only discernible difference between Spitzer's lady and "Spot's" appears to lie in the amount of clothing worn; "Spot's" girl having a drape across her shoulders and a mask over her eyes, which were two articles that Spitzer's model apparently considered superfluous. At any rate, both displays accounted for long lines of males.

In addition to the above, Madden tied-up with a cosmetic company for distribution of 5,000 packages of "Goona Goona Love Powder" (face powder) and put out the same number of heralds featuring reviews from prominent movie critics and other notes on the picture. Posting of twenty-eight 24-sheets and the usual amount of Madden advertising (99 per cent free) rounded out the campaign. Despite a downpour of rain and a high tide that flooded some of the downtown streets, the show opened to excellent business.

While this isn't a plug for unemployed models, it's only fair to state that actual check-up showed that the live model in the window stopped 35,000 pedestrians during the two-day display. And, as "Spot" terms it, the film is one of the "breast" pictures of the time. So go to it fellows, with Madden's compliments.

LEONARD GORDON IS GETTING OUT HOUSE ORGAN FOR THEATRE

We are in receipt of a house organ recently published in the interests of the Palace Theatre, Newport News, Va., by Manager Leonard Gordon. It's a four-page affair, titled the "Palace Little Movie Mag" and contains news of forthcoming and current attractions, notes for the fans and a plug for the Palace Mickey Mouse Club.

In answer to Leonard's inquiry as to our opinion of his "Little Mag", we'd say it's very well gotten-up. One thing, however, escapes our eye and that is a bit of advertising to help defray expense of publication. With a fair circulation assured, we believe it's possible to sell enough space to make one of these organs pay its own freight. Sometimes it's good policy to give a merchant one insertion free of charge in order to get him started off on the right foot. Frequent contact with both readers and merchants will also bring out new ideas as to more suitable contents and form of make-up. They're grand little gadgets—these house organs—if run along the right lines, and have great possibilities.

MAMMOTH JIG-SAW PUZZLE BUILT FROM 24-SHEET BY PROULX

And still the jig-saw puzzle stunts continue to merrily jig their way along; this time up in Amsterdam, N. Y., where D. J. Proulx, manager of the Strand Theatre, claims to have built the largest jig-saw puzzle in the world (and it wasn't Kate Smith's picture, either, which became the subject of a pretentious claim made by another Club member a short time ago).

This puzzle was made from a 24-sheet on "Animal Kingdom," using just the portion with the heads of Ann Harding and Leslie Howard and pasting them on beaverboard. After cutting the section into many parts with a band-saw borrowed from a local merchant, the pieces were assembled, placed in a merchant's window and labeled "The Largest Jig-Saw Puzzle in the World." The display attracted large crowds and people were invited to estimate the number of pieces in the puzzle. The familiar guest ticket gags was used in connection with this announcement. Remarkable response on the part of the public greeted the move and the local newspaper gave the stunt space every day. Advertising and stills on the picture were also displayed in the window. The accompanying photo shows the assembled puzzle.

Since the entire cost to Proulx was limited to a 24-sheet and a piece of old beaverboard from the work-shop, it will be seen that a lot of worth-while publicity was obtained at very little expense.

LUDY LIKES DAILY GUEST TICKET BOX TO PLUG GOOD WILL

For a month-to-month plug for theatre and creator of good will, John R. Ludy, manager for George Mallers at the Hines Theatre, Portland, Ind., thinks a whole lot of the tie-up he made with a local newspaper for the running of a daily box inviting some citizen and another to witness the current attraction free of charge.

As Ludy states, the gag only costs a pair of ducats per day and rates a front page box. His notice was headed: "Inviting—(name of person)—As a Guest of the (newspaper) at the Hines Theatre. Name of picture, cast and notice to effect that the pass was not transferable followed.

So help yourselves to the idea, Round Tablers, with Ludy's compliments. How about the rest of the fellows on the Mallers Brothers Circuit, George? Can't you round them up for the Club?

"OLIVER TWIST" OPENS!

Chris Buckley and Michael Simmons Built Up a Heavy Gate With Fine Advance Work

THE much heralded premiere of "Oliver Twist" took place Saturday night, March 11, at the Harmanus Bleecker Hall, Albany, N. Y., garnished with regulation Hollywood trimmings of glaring Kleigs and special radio broadcast. Numerous tie-ups, advance newspaper publicity and wide-spread distribution of novelty advertising matter featured work done by Manager Chris Buckley, who was assisted by Michael J. Simmons and his staff from the Monogram home office.

Among the merchant tie-ups that found their way into local newspapers in the form of cooperative advertising were Oliver Twist loaves of bread, in connection with awards for submitting a new trade name; an ad from a large barber shop that featured the Oliver Twist hair cuts for boys; several Kaynee Clothing co-ops, as the result of a national tie-up, formed prior to the Albany premiere; and another generous sized ad from a local clothier on Oliver Twist suits.

Jig-Saw Puzzle, Too!

In addition to a flock of press notices one of the newspapers ran a jig-saw puzzle "marathon" gag that rated a two-column head, which prompted many to enter puzzle competition for awards offered by the theatre management. Another newspaper tie-up resulted from a deal made with the distributors of a special "Dickie Moore Suit."

The radio was brought into the campaign both in the advance work and on the night of the premiere, Simmons making a talk on Hollywood that netted a good sized story in the papers. On opening night the "mike" was brought into play in the theatre lobby in the regulation manner of introducing celebrities as they arrived.

Other advance work included distribution of 10,000 special Oliver Twist bookmarks among schools; distribution of 15,000 blotters in offices of principal buildings in city; special dinner tie-up with a restaurant famous in Albany for years; and menu tie-ups with two other well known restaurants.

Setting an Example

A most interesting observation at this point would be to point out that getting behind a picture worthy of the effort, and doing it in a great big way has many compensations, not the least that of corralling many extra admissions that night ordinarily pass the box office without giving the picture a second thought.

"Oliver Twist" could easily have been accepted by Chris Buckley as just another picture and left to shift for itself. Had he done so he would have been literally cutting his own throat because business ever since the opening has clearly demonstrated what a swell campaign really has done for this picture. And since the picture itself is as good a piece of entertainment as has come from Hollywood this season, the resultant word-of-mouth publicity is doing its share in making this a record-breaking run.

No greater acid test could have been applied to any picture than to stack it up against the handicaps of present day conditions. Everything was against its coming through successfully; yet, that is exactly what it did do. Banks were closed and none were any too certain that they would reopen. Theatre trade was 'way off in and around Albany. Money was scarce, and getting scarcer. Yet, despite all of these crepe hangers "Oliver Twist" twisted them out of their parlors and radios and onto the long lines extending from the box office of the Harmanus Bleecker Hall Theatre.

Who said exploitation was dying or dead? Baloney, sez we, here is the answer and both Simmons and Buckley deserve credit for it along with the picture.

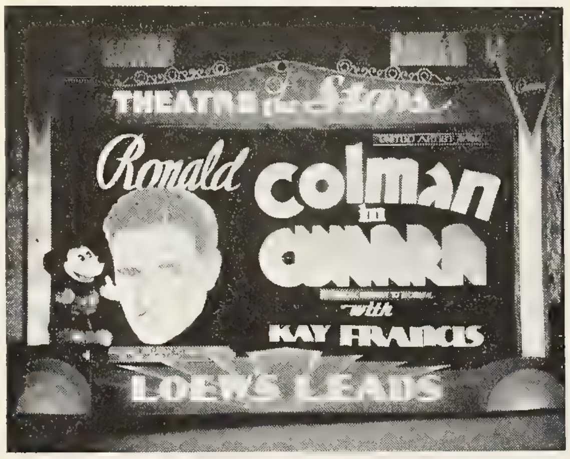
Merchant Tie-up Drive!

In connection with a drive to arrange tie-ups with local business concerns managers of three Warner houses in Wilmington, Del., were recently named on a committee to serve in this capacity. Lewis Black, manager of the Aldine, is chairman of the group, which also includes Morris Rosenthal of the Arcadia and B. Seamon of the Queen. The committee will have charge of tie-ups formerly arranged by Paul Costello, recently assigned to the York, Pa., district.

District Discontinued

One of the districts of the Fox-Intermountain division has been discontinued and merged with the other three. Dave Davis, manager, has been sent to North Platte, Neb., to manage the Fox and Paramount Theatres, replacing Charles Ernst, who has been placed in charge of the West and Rialto in Trinidad, Colo. The latter succeeds Henry Westerfield, who is on leave of absence.

WHAT'S THE IDEA!

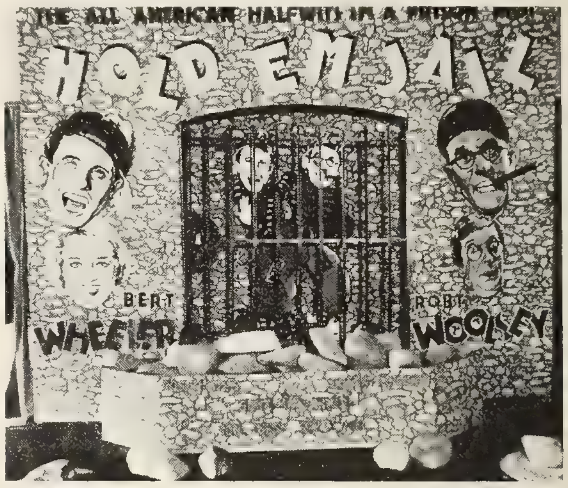


Is Mickey Mouse thumbing his nose at Ronald Coleman or is he horning in on the sentiment expressed in the caption under Coleman's head: "I've Been Faithful To Thee, Cynara, In My Fashion". Also note caption under title: "Of Special Interest To Women". At any rate, this very attractive lobby display was designed by Ed Melniker, manager of Loew's Rochester Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., and it occasioned many complimentary remarks.

MORE EVIDENCE OF LOW COST DISPLAYS MADE BY FLEISCHMAN

A glance at some displays turned out by Harvey Fleischman, manager of the Embassy Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., gives further support to the claim already made by this department that many of the fellows on the Louis Frisch and Sam Rinzler's Randforce circuit are doing a lot of excellent work along these lines at very low cost.

A rock garden effect effectively carried out the scheme of the display made for "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," all of which was made possible through a tie-up Fleischman arranged with a neighborhood florist. In addition to supplying $50 worth of shrubs, plants and cut flowers, the florist built a very attractive tie-up display for his window and distributed gratis over 1,600 red roses to women patrons during the three evening performances. He was compensated through being allowed to tag each vase.



The large head of "Scarface" was painted on linen and illuminated from the rear. Placed at the far end of the foyer, with all lights dimmed, this display was particularly effective.

On account of the light and color combinations, the photo on "Hold 'Em Jail" does not do full justice to the attractiveness of this display. The center figures, not easily discerned in the photo, were placed in a shadow box, dressed in football regalia, with footballs in arms and balls and chains around legs.

An excellent flash made some time ago for "Bring 'Em Back Alive," which might also be used in connection with other pictures, was obtained by cementing a six-sheet to the sidewalk under the marquee. This was done with liquid glass, or silicate of soda, which, when coated on paper or most any substance, hardens into glass. As Harvey claims, one can walk, hop, skip or jump on it without wearing out anything but shoeleather. Since the glass is soluble in water, care must be exercised to cover the sheet with a rubber mat in case of rain.

All of the above suggestions ought to be interesting to other Round Tablers and we're obliged to Fleischman for making it possible for us to publish them. We hope that he and other members of Randforce will send in additional evidence of their work.

WHITNEY PUT OVER FINE CAMPAIGN ON 'STATE FAIR' FILM

Splendid cooperation from local merchants, a newspaper and a number of novel exploitation stunts, featured a most effective campaign made on "State Fair" by Gerald Whitney, manager of the Fox-Curran Theatre, Boulder, Colo. With no press sheet to work from until one day prior to playdate, Whitney and his associates had to frame original newspaper notices and work out a general scheme of campaign. Data at hand is all the evidence necessary to prove beyond a doubt that a corking job was accomplished.

A brief summary of the newspaper campaign shows that 491 inches of free publicity was received, 48 of which was front page and not inclusive of 248 inches of cooperative ad space taken by local merchants. Total paid advertising amounted to about 207 inches and included local and out-of-town papers. Front page readers were received in all. The ad reproduced below is half of a four and one-half inch deep that ran across the top portion of two pages, which, according to customary practices among newspapers, requires considerable salesmanship to obtain.

State Fair atmosphere was the dominant note of the campaign and carried out in every piece of advertising and exploitation. A miniature Fair was conducted in a nearby vacant store and consisted of several hundred exhibits of pickles, mince-meat, all sorts of canned goods, as well as pies, cakes and home-made candy. Quilts, rugs and a variety of fancy needle-work rounded out the display. Ten dollars in gold and 16 pairs of guest tickets were offered for the best exhibits.

Through Whitney's efforts the entire block on both sides of the theatre took on the appearance of a Midway at a State Fair. All stores carried a 3 foot by 12 foot banner over the entrance with copy consistent with the dealer's offerings. For instance, a music store banner read: "Side Show—'State Fair'—Music Exhibit," etc., etc. In other words, the theatre represented the Big Top and the stores on either side the Side Show. Material was promoted from a local lumber dealer to build a tower 7 feet square by 12 feet high, on top of which were placed giant flood and spot lights to convert the block into a veritable "White Way." Book Stores also carried banners of the same size reading: "There Is a Good Time for Everyone in 'State Fair'—Phil Strong's Sensational Novel—Read the Book and See the Picture at the Curran."

Additional effort included placing of 75 especially printed window cards on all country roads out of Boulder and in good locations about town with cards reading "Come to Colorado's Greatest State Fair at the Curran Theatre (playdates, names, etc.); distribution of 5,000 "State Fair" heralds in nearby towns; special lobby front and four oil paintings of leading players, and use of tire cover ads on leading taxi company's cars.

Playing up the fact that the picture was being given its "Rocky Mountain Premiere," Whitney arranged with the University of Colorado Band of 80 pieces to lead a parade to the theatre on opening night and there render a concert one hour before opening. The Premiere was signalled by sending up six explosive bombs (also promoted from university) at the start of both afternoon and evening shows.

Returning to the subject of merchant cooperation, it's only just to Whitney to let his fellow showmen know how splendidly the different storekeepers (about 25 in all) came through with ads that carried "State Fair" copy and generously gave window space that tied-in "State Fair" with special sales during run of picture. The local Chamber of Commerce became so enthusiastic over the campaign that it sent the theatre a letter endorsing the move. Also, let us repeat that the "Fair" motif, consistently used throughout the campaign, immeasurably helped the picture roll up a most satisfactory gross.

A Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer PICTURE

Above is the poster on "Red Headed Woman" that was recently awarded second prize in the annual nationwide poster judging contest sponsored by the Chicago Association of Commerce. This 24-sheet was drawn by Vincentini, MGM artist, and was prepared by Hal Burrows, art director of MGM, under supervision of Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity for this company.

A FEW NOTES ON AN ECONOMICAL FRONT MADE BY PAUL WILL

In line with the current practice of operating theatres as economically as possible, let us call attention to the type of front fashioned for Jake Rosenthal's house, the Iowa, in Waterloo, Iowa, by artist Paul Will.

He makes his whole front out of wall board and then gives it a coat of shellac, thus making it possible to wash the board off and use the front over and over again. Assembling is as follows: top portion in two sections, hung from canopy; sides fitted accordingly, giving whole front even surface; letters, cutout and mounted on front to give effect of depth. Although the front partially covers the doors this is optional. The letters used in the front are saved and used for other advertising. If desired, this front can be converted into a permanent one by mounting frames for insertion of three-sheets.

A small snap-shot at hand of one of Will's front shows a center piece that was moved out front after being used inside the lobby one week prior to run of picture. The photo is too small to reproduce to advantage and we hope Paul will send along a larger one so that we can do full justice to the apparent attractiveness of his displays. He also has some ideas on front panel posters which we're sure will be of interest to his fellow Club members. All he needs is a good camera or a tie-up with some local photographer as a means to provide this material for Club pages, and we predict he'll find some way out of this difficulty next time we hear from him.

Paul's boss, Jake Rosenthal, has been ailing for the past several weeks and we hope he's feeling a lot better by now. Ailing or not, however, Jake continues to keep his name before the public. He (The Great Jake, as this showman is sometimes called) is a very well known personality out his way and his many years of experience in showbusiness make his files of great importance to newspapers and publicity men. We hope he will continue to keep his Club posted on activities at the Iowa and here's our sincere wishes for a speedy return to the best of health.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

A CONSOLIDATION OF EXHIBITORS HERALD-WORLD AND MOTION PICTURE NEWS

IT PAYS TO KEEP THE FAITH

Year after year, since its founding by Martin Quigley in 1915, this publication has issued each week in its functions of service to this industry of the motion picture. It has evolved as the industry has grown, widening scope, acquiring experience, fortifying its background of judgment, enriching its outlook. Through these years it has gathered to itself, by those processes which characterize sincere endeavour, all that preceded it in publication attainment from the very beginning, all that was done from the days of the nickelodeon dawn of 1907.

Motion Picture Herald, like the whole of the motion picture industry itself, is the product of an industrious quarter of a century of continuous effort. It has recorded and with consistency contributed to and participated in the growth of the industry of which it is so positively an integral part.

In the light of that experience, Motion Picture Herald now reaffirms here its conviction that there is a real community of interest in this industry, that the public must be served with entertainment for its money's worth, that the exhibitor must be supplied with product at a price and of a quality upon which he can make a profit, and that the producers and distributors must be adequately supported to encourage the use of capital, the application of the diligence, the enterprise and the daring which are essential to showmanship and all that pertains to showmanship. These are obvious fundamentals, but they are sometimes forgotten.

Motion Picture Herald, bearer of all the traditions of service that the whole career of the industry contains, is dedicated to the whole cause of the motion picture and with a conviction based on these many years of experienced observation that the only sound prosperity is in service to the whole cause, without special advantages to special interests.

Motion Picture Herald is the only institution of the motion picture industry which has been continuously in active service on a single unwavering policy for so many years. It pays to keep the faith.

'AUCTION IN SOULS' GOOD; 'LIFE OF JIMMY DOLAN' FAIR

Nagel, Hyams and Schertzinger Tops

"AUCTION IN SOULS"
KBS

Direction ....Victor L. Schertzinger
Original by..................Eugene O'Neill
Adaptation ....F. Hugh Herbert
Screen Play..................Warren Duff
Photography ....Arthur Edeson
Cast: Conrad Nagel, Leila Hyams, Tommy Conlon, Claire Windsor, Stanley Fields, Alexander Carr, Fred Kohler, Three Ambassadors.

Heres' a picture that can stand on its own feet as a good old-fashioned melodrama, ably done by a director who knows his business, and an intelligent cast.

It's a top-notcher among independent pictures, and an excellent finale for the KBS combination, which has already rung up several worthwhile productions in the course of its brief career as a producing company.

As a story, it's one of those table d'hote affairs that sets everything imaginable before the customer in the way of situation and incident. That's

Beginning in the leisurely but colorful atmosphere of a tent stock company, the picture winds up in a wild but convincing burst of melodrama on the grounds of a circus during the night show, when an elephant goes berserk, sets the big top on fire, and there's hell to pay before everything ends happily.

On the way to the circus, the story takes to the air, with several sequences in a modern broadcasting station.

From which it may be gathered that "Auction In Souls" is skirting the ragged edge of hokum melodrama of the time. That is doesn't go over the edge is due to Victor Schertzinger's direction. Time after time he takes the curse off a situation that would have sunk a less able director.

The circus sequence is played for all it is worth, as are the other pivotal situations in the picture.

Conrad Nagel and Leila Hyams are standouts in their roles. Tommy Conlon as the boy is a vividly real youngster. Stanley Fields delivers a roughneck masterpiece as the head of the stage crew and Nagel's loyal friend. Claire Windsor clicks decisively as the faithless wife, brief though her part is.

The title is a dud. A microscopic analysis of the story would fail to show any more reason for calling it "Auction in Souls" than "The Star Spangled Banner" or "How Have You Been?"

Any live exhibitor can give this one both barrels and be sure of sending his customers home satisfied.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 110, No. 13

EXCLUSIVELY OF THE SCREEN

"KING KONG," variously conceived, dreamed and nightmared by Merian C. Cooper, Ernest Schoedsack and the late Edgar Wallace, and variously photographed and done into pictures by most every known process of manipulation and camera trickery in Hollywood, is not only a current box office success, but also a performance in a direction which will bear much exploration.

The motion picture has been these many years woefully tied to the material facts in front of the camera, a very literal re-creation of events. It is, to be sure, a great achievement to be able so to re-create events, but it is even more important to be able to present events which never happened save in the fancy of the creative artist.

The problem of the motion picture is, after all, merely to set down in light and shade certain effects on a ribbon thirty-five millimeters wide in images somewhat less than an inch high, one after another. When one thinks of the giant sets, such as were built for "Intolerance," or the amazing spectacles created at such cost for such productions as "Ben Hur," one is reminded of the essay of the late Mr. Charles Lamb on the origin of roast pork. He set forth, you will recall, that in that period of history, roast pork was discovered by the accident of a lad licking his burned finger when he sought to haul the pet pig out of the ashes of his home. Thereafter civilization, architecture and industry were all but destroyed before the world found out that it was necessary only to cook the pig, not to burn the house. Something of that applies to the manner of the making of motion pictures.

"King Kong" is far from perfect in its simulations, but they are sufficient to give a considerable degree of dramatic and hair-raising illusion. Also there never was an ape fifty feet tall, and he did not tear up New York City, but you see him do it, which is what the film is made for.

In that same category of narration is our beloved "Mickey Mouse," who never lived and who is the most living of all the motion picture's figures. "Mickey" also does the impossible, continually.

With the tiny Mickey and mighty Kong we have the motion picture doing something that only the motion picture can do—and that is the realm in which the motion picture can do its best. The more important successes and significant contributions to the progress of both the art and the industry have come from making on the screen products which are essentially of the screen, not mere reportings from the other arts.

BELOVED LIARS

WE set down in sadness the passing of Mr. Lewis T. Stone of the Evening Citizen of Winsted, Connecticut, for some three decades famous as the newspaper mythologist of New England. His were the merry little one-stick tales of the hare-lipped cat that whistled "Yankee-Doodle," the hoop snakes that swallowed each other, and the cold cow that gave ice cream. It was fun that started in earnest when Mr. Stone, correspondent for the New York World, first went to inventing with a tale of a wild man from the hills. Another of his ilk we remember as "the Wichita Liar," Mr. Dave Leahy, who started with a tale of a baby slipping down a bored well, a few feet a day, until his metropolitan paper clients got suspicious. Later Mr. Leahy had a tornado blow the well out of the ground and cut it up for post holes. We remember well Mr. Frank Bacon's Broadway presentation of his adventure the winter of '57 when he "drove a swarm of bees across the Rocky Mountains and never lost a bee." And there was Mr. Washington D. Percival, the Omaha correspondent, who recorded the battle between a wild cat and a chanticleer hat, and who had the city council of Ely, Nebraska, pass an ordinance forbidding barbers to eat onions. This country needs better liars and less of them.

CONCERNING A VIEWPOINT

THE gossip that Mr. Herbert Hoover sat in on a motion picture industry conference at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York, and that Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, president of these United States, has not been entirely pleased by what has been called the holding of the "seamiest side" of industry affairs to the gaze of the public, has reached the columnists of the tabloid press.

Assuming that either or both of these reports are correct, one wonders just how anyone would have expected Mr. Hoover, who had just left a job in Washington, to be blazing with optimism in his thought and counsels, or that Mr. Roosevelt would be automatically pleased with so emphatic an expression of dismay and apprehension from so great and so public an industry as the first loud manifestation from American enterprise to be made in his new born administration.

Napoleon, right after Waterloo, probably did not consider the outlook for Europe and the world very bright. However, it is not recorded that anybody troubled to ask him at that time.

THIS WEEK . . . .

DUTY'S DEMAND

Thwarted for the moment in his hitherto firm resignation intention by a sense of duty to his job, pressure of organization leaders, MPTOA's longtime, popular president, M. A. Lightman, this week declared from the South that he would hang on "until the present industry program is completed or until . . . the organization can officially elect a new president." Nonetheless anxious is "M. A." to "get out at the earliest possible moment," to return to his Memphis theatres. . . .

IN THE DOOR

Into the White House's Oval Room the motion picture industry may take its problems, drop them on the desk of President Roosevelt, intimated amuser Eddie Dowling following a 40-minute conversation with the nation's chief. As Mr. Dowling recorded it the president said: "You come right in the door to my office" (with amusement industry problems). "That is the only access to the government you need so long as I am here." . . .

REEL EDUCATION

Happily combining smart business-building potentiality with concrete educational value is a plan of Fox's Movietonews, Inc., devised for the Embassy, newsreel house on Broadway. School children of the city may attend at reduced prices, each week submit essays: "Which event . . . is most significant . . . and Why?" Winners receive annual passes, are screened reading brainchildren. . . .

MULTI-TONGUED

Far across Europe wended its producers to make the internationally-flavored "Hell on Earth," which, in its cast, contains a Frenchman, Englishman, German, Jew, Negro, a group common to many a jokester's best yarn. Each speaks his own language, the polyglot result having been directed by one Victor Trivas. To America's linguistically-inclined picture public, newly formed Aeolian Pictures Corporation will bring this opportunity. . . .

LEGAL TREK

To Camden, in New Jersey, on April 19 will trek legal lights of 16 motion picture companies, there to answer on the order of Federal Judge John Boyd Avis an action brought by Camden's Victoria Amusement Company, contending violation of the original Sherman, the adjunctive Clayton anti-trust acts. Operating four houses, Victoria charged independents are compelled to use old film, while distributor-interested theatres enjoy the best. No innovation, the plaintiff's allegations will have a familiar ring to the traveling legal lights. . . .

RACQUET RIDDLE

"To be or not to be" was last week to small, swarthy Henri Cochet, racquet wizard and world's premier tennis player, a burning question. To him, as to many another shining star of the sporting firmament, came an opportunity to appear in a motion picture. Producers, not altruists, wanted Cochet, the actor, not nearly so much as Cochet, the tennis player. Into the affair came France's stringent tennis federation, finely discriminating, concluding that champion Cochet might play in motion pictures with their blessing, but for him to play in a picture which might center about tennis would jeopardize M. Cochet's precious amateur standing. . . .

GOLD DIGGERS

In conflict, gold diggers last week carried their complaint to New York's federal court when Warner asked injunctive intervention to prevent Majestic Pictures and Capitol Film Exchange, distributor, from releasing its "The Gold Diggers of Paris," contending it infringed Warner's older "The Gold Diggers," "The Gold Diggers of Broadway," the budding "Gold Diggers of 1933." Majestic's answer: "gold diggers" are commonly used words.

ROYAL CUTTER

Frequently in recent months has gone England's royal heir, the Prince of Wales, to Shepherd's Bush, the studios of Gaumont-British, there to look, criticize, edit the film biography of himself which is now being produced. In a sense autobiographical, the film will contain shots taken by the Prince himself in his divers colonial excursions since 1911. Soon will U. S. matrons have the opportunity of seeing on the screen the world's greatest "catch." . . .

PRICE CONSCIOUS

Inadvisable, opinionated Chicago exhibitors last week, was it to make "price conscious" their patronage. Accordingly, from newspaper advertising has been summarily dropped all price reference. Typographical emphasis on low matinee prices, typographical sotto voce on higher evening scale dismayed circuits, stirred them to a protest to which neighborhood independent exhibitors bent a friendly ear. . . .

STIPEND SUIT

Unimpaired will continue James R. Grainger's stipend as a Fox vice president virtually without portfolio, even though New York's city court must aid. For the week ended March 11, Mr. Grainger received but half of the $2,500 salary to which he lays claim. For the remaining $1,250 alleged due, Grainger's attorney, Saul Rogers, last week brought judicial action against Fox Film, the while Mr. Rogers continues protracted dickering for a Grainger contract settlement. . . .

RENEWED FAITH

Ambitious is the program designed for New York's grandiloquent Radio City Music Hall on Sunday, April 2, when will be performed a "Holy Hour" ceremony to call the entire world to a renewed faith in religion. Participating will be leaders of all religions, the "entire world" to be reached via radio broadcast. From Rome will come a broadcast of a Vatican City ceremony; from Washington an address by President Roosevelt. . . .

DEFYING DEPRESSION

Into the wave of retrenchment, depression, Fox this week launched the reopening of its Western Avenue studio in Hollywood, where once in a cinematically remote day there strutted and posed such as Theda Bara, Betty Blythe, Gladys Brockwell. Projected production: 20 English features, six foreign. Not to be confused is Western Avenue with Fox's mainstay Movietone City. . . .

THEATRE RECEIPTS SWING UPWARD AS PUBLIC'S CONFIDENCE RETURNS

Several Large Companies Reported To Be Discussing Full Abandonment of Pay Cuts; Unions Holding Conferences

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Motion picture theatre box-offices practically everywhere showed definite signs of rehabilitation this week. Reports rushed to New York from the field indicated that business rapidly is returning to normal. Although some territories have not yet responded, books of the national circuits revealed a surprising upturn, particularly in the large cities where banks are operating without restrictions. Typical of the general improvement is a 10 per cent increase over the weekend at theatres of the Warner Circuit.

Almost everywhere a new outlook prevails. Obviously this has a definite relation to theatre business. The stringency in practically all large centers has given way to a brighter perspective, and it is predicted by leaders in New York that within three weeks further substantial benefits will be derived from the public's reaction to passage of the 3.2 per cent beer bill, and to President Roosevelt's new plans for employment of 250,000 jobless on federal projects.

The swing upward is hourly gaining momentum. Seventy per cent of all banks in the country are now functioning without restrictions. Half of the others are open for partial business. Only 10 per cent are closed, and half of these are reorganizing. Even in Detroit, exhibitors are expected to benefit shortly as a result of a new banking system in which General Motors is an important factor.

Theatre owners everywhere will get their share of the $200,000,000 which the Administration will make available for lessening unemployment. Gold hoarders have loosened $400,000,000. Brewers in the East alone will spend $23,000,000 in a vast building program, and already many thousands have been employed in their plants.

The Industry's Salary Cut

The industry itself is facing a new situation as a result of the arbitrary decision of all producer-distributor members of the MPPDA to effect 25 and 50 per cent reduction in all salaries over $50. The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences announced Wednesday that under no circumstances would the studios close, and added that the number of persons voluntarily accepting the salary reductions, in all studios, was 93.9 per cent.

Some of the large companies are understood to be discussing complete abandonment of the salary reduction order. There is growing resentment in many quarters where financial situations did not warrant such drastic action.

In the distribution branches, both at home offices and in the field, there exists deep antipathy toward the extent of the slash and the manner in which it was effected. One executive said this week that "salesmen and branch managers in the field have lost all enthusiasm. The distributors will lose ten times more than that which they expect to gain by the cuts." This situation, it was pointed out, might force the issue quickly, at least insofar as it affects exchange personnel.

Although no formal discussions have been held, it is understood that Warners, United Artists and Columbia favor revisions of the industry's emergency scale, which is supposed to be in effect for eight weeks from March 6.

Repercussions from exhibitors who immediately demanded severe rental reductions is another factor, also the union situation at theatres and studios.

A crisis in the dispute with studio union workers, who steadfastly refused to accept the cut, will be reached within a few days. The matter now is being arbitrated in New York, and there is a possibility, that unless the various unions affiliated with Hollywood's Federated Studio Crafts accede to the producer's drastic demands, studios might be closed, at least temporarily.

Late last week, studios were virtually restored to normal activities. They will continue until a decision is made in the arbitration conferences started in New York Wednesday, in which William C. Elliott, president of the IATSE, and representatives of the large companies are participating. Five labor delegates and five representatives of producers and distributors, headed by Pat Casey, comprise the committee.

Theatre Situation Serious

Studio unions not affected are electrical workers, carpenters, musicians, technicians and others, because of an agreement with the producers effected last year. Those involved in the fight are scenic artists, assistant directors, script clerks, costumers, stationary and operating engineers, machinists, ornamental plasterers, pattern makers, plumbers and steam-fitters, painters, drivers, upholsterers, sheet metal workers and molders. Members have agreed to walk out if their pay is cut. Production immediately would be affected.

Coincidentally, the Elliott-Casey arbitration group will take up the question of the new emergency scale with circuit operators, affiliated and independent, who now are demanding that all theatre projectionists and stage hands accept cuts, at least for the duration of the eight-week period.

The labor situation has reached serious proportions in many territories. Usually, the IATSE national association does not interfere with negotiations between individual affiliated locals in the field and theatre owners.

Theatres contend that revised scales are necessary if they are to remain open. Many see the possibility of the socalled independent unions, not affiliated with the IATSE, gaining considerable ground if IATSE locals refuse to accede to the exhibitors' demands.

Operators and stage hands are involved, principally. Musicians, under jurisdiction of the American Federation of Musicians, are employed only in a few de luxe theatres.

Theatres closed down completely in Syracuse and Cleveland after the unions refused to accept cuts. A shutdown was averted at Pittsburgh by an eleventh-hour agreement. Indianapolis houses were preparing to close Thursday. Chicago exhibitors are considering similar action, while cessation of activities has been threatened by owners at Columbus, Kansas City, Memphis, Portland and elsewhere. In many cities, two-week notices have been posted in accordance with agreements with unions when dismissal is contemplated.

Strikes and walkouts are pending in New Orleans and Youngstown. In Shreveport, La., a walkout already has taken place.

The mayors of Cleveland and Syracuse entered the controversies as arbitrators after merchants complained that the darkening of theatres was having a distressing effect on business, especially in the downtown sections.

Theatres Insist Revised Labor Scales Are Essential to Continued Operation; Rental Cuts Limited to Individuals

Exhibitors throughout the country are demanding that the operators and stage hands accept cuts ranging from 10 to 50 per cent. The national average is 25 per cent.

Unions voluntarily accepted cuts in Baltimore, Detroit and San Francisco, where reduction of 37½ per cent was granted exhibitors.

Distributors decided late last week that rental cuts will be made only in individual cases. A spokesman in New York charged that current mass action in numerous territories is "just part of the constant effort of exhibitors to establish lower rental scales."

Exhibitors requesting relief must show their books and records to exchange managers. A large number of rental adjustments already have been made.

Typical of the demands by exhibitors are those of independent owners in Chicago, who ask for rental slashes ranging from 40 to 50 per cent. Des Moines owners seek a 30 per cent cut; Indianapolis, 30; Kansas City, 25 to 50; Minneapolis and the Dakotas, 40 to 60; New Jersey, 25; Omaha, 25, likewise operators in New York, Philadelphia and the national association of Allied.

Mass meetings in protest did not materialize, except at New York, Philadelphia and in a few other key points. There is a possibility, however, that an entire bloc of midwestern states will join in demanding concerted action.

Stocks Reasonably Firm Since Market Reopened

Motion picture stocks have shown varying degrees of fluctuation during the past week, although, on the whole, they have been reasonably firm since the opening of the market on March 15 after the enforced holiday from March 3, brought about by the general banking situation.

Eastman Kodak led the film group on the picture board, climbing to 61¼, or just ⅛ of a point under its high for the year. Consolidated Film went up to 8¼ and small gains were scored by Fox, Warner, RKO and Loew's. Of these only Loew's has lost ground, and then only slightly.

On Tuesday and Wednesday of the current week, stocks generally seemed to have lost some of the steadiness of the two days following the opening. There follows a comparison of closing prices on March 3 and on March 22, with net chnges given for time elapsed:

CONGRESS GETS FIRST FILM BILLS; EXHIBITORS WINNING TAX BATTLES

Sixty State Bills Already Defeated Since January; 15 Legislatures Adjourned; Fight Still On in Dozen Other Capitals

Celler Again Introduces Measures to Prohibit Block Booking and to Permit Interstate Shipments of Fight Films

The motion picture industry continues to make satisfactory progress in its record-breaking battle against state legislative activities directed against theatres and films by means of new taxation, censorship and the like. With three score bills already defeated since January and a dozen and a half state legislatures having adjourned, various exhibitor interests in the field are entering the last few rounds with high hopes that they will emerge unscathed.

At Washington, federal bills repealing the law prohibiting interstate transportation of fight films and prohibiting block booking, introduced by Representative Celler of New York regularly for the past several years, have been reintroduced in Congress by him, so far the only motion picture measures to be offered during President Roosevelt's emergency session.

The block booking bill is the same measure with which former Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart of Iowa kept himself in the film limelight for many years. It is intended "to prevent obstruction and burdens upon interstate trade and commerce in copyrighted motion picture films and to prevent restraint upon free competition in the production, distribution and exhibition of copyrighted motion picture films, and to prevent the further monopolization of the business of producing, distributing and exhibiting copyrighted motion pictures by prohibiting blind booking and block booking of copyrighted motion picture films and by prohibiting the arbitrary allocation of such films by distributors to theatres in which they or other distributors have an interest, direct or indirect, and by prohibiting the arbitrary refusal to book or sell such films to exhibitors in which they have no such interest."

In the Senate, Senator Dill, of Washington, has reintroduced his bill for consolidation of the copyright laws, in which infringement of motion pictures is made subject to statutory damages of from $50 to $10,000. Further details on the Dill bill appear elsewhere in this issue, on page 12.

Activities in State Legislatures

Meanwhile, several state legislatures are nearing the end of their current sessions. Already adjourned are those in Arizona, Arkansas, Delaware, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, New Mexico, North Datoka, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, West Virginia and Wyoming. In session, among others, are legislatures of California, Connecticut, Illinois, Maryland, Massachusetts, Missouri, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma, Texas and Wisconsin. In those states, especially, the industry is confronted with adverse legislation.

Industry leaders in Arizona succeeded in halting hurried activities of legislatures to rush through before adjournment a 10 per cent amusement tax, and also a Senate bill for a tax of one-half of a cent on each 10 cent ticket.

Pictures made in California and exported to other states now are subject to a 4 per cent tax in that state, based on an assessed valuation. Other theatre and film measures are before the legislature.

The House in Connecticut voted down three adverse bills: state censorship; prohibiting Sunday shows before 7 p. m., and a third providing for safety devices on projection machine shutters.

At Delaware, Representative Poore's 5 per cent admission tax bill was reported on its merits in the House. Proceeds would go to hospitals.

Passage of a 3 per cent sales tax bill in Illinois obviates any admission tax legislation.

A measure providing for an excise tax on film theatre admissions, and another to permit Sunday shows, have been dropped from the calendar by the House in Kansas. The number of censors would have been reduced by a third bill.

Late last week the Maryland legislative committee reported favorably on a bill to repeal Baltimore's "blue" laws. Delegates Rice, Goodman and Hirt introduced a measure to repeal state censorship, while bills to increase projectionists' license fees and to tax admissions 10 per cent are being fought respectively by operators and exhibitors. Another bill, which is not expected to pass, would raise annual license fees of theatres.

Aiding Independents

The New Mexico legislature this week passed, and the governor signed, a bill compelling distributors to offer films simultaneously to independents and circuits, and prohibiting deals made outside the state. The state may decide the price when bidding raises the rental figure unduly.

An unpaid state censor board and a measure to restrict juvenile attendance are the principal anti-industry bills pending in Massachusetts.

Theatres of Missouri are almost certain to be included in a proposed luxury sales tax, suggested recently in a special message by Governor Park. He said he will present this week a bill for a 2 per cent luxury tax to include admissions. Exhibitors are fighting the proposal. The House killed a state "blue" law repealer. Another measure would impose a tax of one-fifth of a cent on each foot of film shown in Missouri houses.

The New York taxation and retrenchment committee of the Assembly disapproved Tuesday of Assemblyman Moffat's bill to abolish the censor board, and tax film exhibition.

Ohio is the scene of much industry legislative activity. Efforts are being made to lift state censorship on newsreels on the grounds that newsreels should not be censored any more than newspapers. Stench bombing is now a state offense, the governor having signed such a measure. It prohibits possession or manufacture. In addition to the state 10 per cent tax proposal on admissions, which is part of Governor White's program, Cleveland houses are faced with a city tax of 10 cents per seat per year, Mayor Miller having made such a proposal in his budget plan. A bill introduced by Representative Baker, relieving exhibitors of the penalty now existing for showing parts which had been ordered deleted by the state censors, was adopted by the Senate last week. Solons at Columbus tabled a state bill, authored by Senator Yoder, making it compulsory for all exhibitors in the state to employ a double shift of projectionists.

Representative Connor's bill introduced in the Oklahoma house would make stench-bombing a felony.

A tax of 1 cent for each 10-cent ticket, or fraction thereof, is provided for in a bill now before the Texas legislature.

Taxes on theatre tickets were reduced from 5 to 2½ per cent in the closing days of the Washington state legislature. Legislators killed a bill calling for two men in each booth and requiring one year's apprenticeship and a license for all operators.

A state "blue" law repealer passed the House and was sent to the Senate of Wisconsin.

The legislature at Ontario, Canada, passed a measure making stench-bombing a criminal offense.

Kaplan Gets Penitentiary Term in Local 306 Coercion

Judge Charles C. Nott, in New York general session court late last week sentenced Sam Kaplan, former president of projectionists' local 306 to an indeterminate term in the penitentiary, with a recommendation that he serve six months. A similar sentence was pronounced on Theodore Greenberg, business agent.

Convicted also of coercion, eight others suffered fines, four $500 each and four $250 each. Of the 22 originally under indictment, five were acquitted by a jury, one died and six were acquitted at court order in January.

Paul M. Felton Dead; Was a Pioneer Animator

Death of Paul M. Felton in New York March 14 removed one of the industry's pioneers and authorities on animated pictures. It was with Lyman H. Howe's traveling shows that his work in the field of animation first drew attention. He was also in charge of the music for these shows with their sound effects. But it was some time before this that he began experimenting. As a boy, in 1895, he made books of drawings and undertook to achieve the illusion of motion with the aid of a postcard projector.

Leaving the Howe organization in 1917, Mr. Howe organized the advertising film concern of Bosworth, DeFrenes and Felton Films Company. In March, 1931, he joined the Max Fleischer organization as an animator, leaving in May of 1932 to become associated with Aesop's Fables.

Frank A. Hornig has been elected president of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of Maryland, succeeding Herman A. Blum, who declined to run again. Mr. Hornig was president of the Maryland Exhibitors' League 15 years ago.

Other officers elected include Arthur B. Price, vice president; Harry Gruver, treasurer, and Miss Helen Connelly, secretary. Directors are Louis Gaertner, Walter Pacy, Mr. Blum, Sam Soltz, Phil Miller and the officers.

PUBLIC PROTESTS DOUBLE FEATURES; SUGGESTS SHORTS AS A STIMULANT

Producers Taking Stand That Practice Cheapens Output; New York Exhibitors to Act; Business Situation a Factor

Ninety Per Cent Opposition to Twin Showings Is Registered on Questionnaire to Leaders of Civic Organizations

The motion picture theatregoing public of the nation is opposed to the showing of two features on one program. The country is thoroughly fed up on double features.

This is the emphatic consensus of active leaders in local, state and national organizations who are in constant daily touch with about 6,000,000 theatregoers.

Producers of Hollywood, through the west coast division of the Hays organization, are contacting representatives of various associations totaling millions in membership, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the public prefers dual features or a single picture and a program of diversified shorts.

With a few minor exceptions, the vote so far is wholly, and vigorously, opposed to twin bills. It is also definitely in favor of a single feature with diversified short subjects.

The questionnaire was dispatched also to educators, women's club leaders, parents' associations, editors, professionals, civic leaders and others. It was sent at the request of Henry Ginsberg, general manager for Hal Roach Studios, and although it originally was intended as a method of discovering something about public opinion on the value of short subjects as entertainment, it has turned out to be a sharp protest against double-billing. The questionnaire read as follows:

1. Do you prefer to patronize the theatre showing double features, namely two pictures, during one performance?
2. Would you prefer a more diversified program, i.e., such as one good feature, supplemented by short comedy subjects, newsreel, etc.?
3. What objections, if any, have you against the double feature policy?

The current emergency situation in the industry has an important relation to the showing of two features on one program, threatening as it does a shortage of product. Also, the recent drastic economy orders throughout the industry may necessitate a cessation of dual-feature rental expenditures, in line with a general nationwide reduction of all operating expenses at theatres.

With the studio situation in Hollywood quite unsettled because of arbitration proceedings now under way between producers and the unions over the industry's new reduced salary scale, there still exists a possibility that studios might close, even temporarily, if and when the unions refuse to accept the industry-wide cuts. The arbitration proceedings did not start until late this week. There was no indication what the results might be. However, it appears certain that a shortage of product would develop if the studios are closed, and subsequently, exhibitors of the country might be forced to accept a national single bill policy.

Also, the trend toward lower admissions during the past six months is said to have considerably weakened the stand of many exhibitors who had previously defended dual policies. Cut prices, along with other influencing factors, lowered grosses. As a result, curtailment of rental expenses might be necessary.

However, exhibitors are not as much concerned at the moment with the double bill question as they are with the more vital problems of readjusting union scales at theatres and of obtaining at least temporary rental relief from exchanges, in order to offset the distressing effects which were brought about by the recent bank moratorium.

Meanwhile, it appears from the flood of protests against duals being received on the coast in answer to the Hays questionnaire, that film fans do not consider double features are the means toward box office stabilization.

The sentiment voiced in the Hays Poll, representing between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000 patrons throughout every state in the nation and in Canada, was officially expressed by Better Films Councils, General Federation of Women's Clubs, Parent-Teachers Associations, Jewish Councils, Daughters of the American Revolution, various local cooperative bodies and committees, and by officials of libraries, churches, schools, theatres and radio stations. Though every state in the union responded, the greatest response was forthcoming from the northwest, middlewest, and from New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Ohio.

Ninety per cent of all replies were against twin billing and were equally as strong in favor of a strong single attraction and a diversified program of short subjects. They revealed many and varied objections to doubles, ranging from "program too long; lack of diversity; discouragement of children attendance; boresome; double bills defeat their own purpose," etc., to the fact that "they make you want to stay at home and listen to the radio."

Double featuring presents a serious problem to the producers of short subjects, crowding their product out of theatres because of the length of dual, and in some cases, triple bills.

Hollywood believes that doubles are cheapening the industry in the public mind and that producers should force action, except in some cases of really worthwhile product of independent or large distributor.

Current theatre receiverships are expected also to help solve the problem. With receivers having administrative control over several circuits, it is considered likely that the double feature situation will come to their attention during readjustment, in connection with admission scales, labor costs, film rentals and service charges.

Mrs. Thomas G. Winter, of the studio branch of the Hays organization, who had charge of the investigation, said: "The double feature may have served a temporary purpose when there were myriads of people who were anxious to get as much as they could. But what is happening? The over-long program leaves them with headache, eyeache and a confused and tired memory to carry away, instead of a clear vision."

"Again and again," Mrs. Winter continued, "irritation is expressed because the two pictures that are shown do not belong to the same kind of audience. One is almost sure to displease. Many of our correspondents say they have given up going to the theatre rather than endure this over-long and incompatible show, and particularly are keeping their children away."

Double billing in its present form is not a question of using up product. Theatre owners almost everywhere now say they are forced to use two features because of competition and inability to reach an agreement to ban the practice. Then, too, with the public "shopping" for entertainment, "two features for the price of one" has had its appeal.

It is understood that Loew's and RKO and Warners might take the lead in formulating plans for a campaign to ban dual features. Loew's already has launched an experiment at one of its key theatres in the metropolitan New

SENATE GETS NEW COPYRIGHT BILL; HOLDOVERS BREAK LAW, SAYS COURT

Not Merely a Violation of Contract, U. S. District Judge Rules; Conflicts with Contention of Allied States

Senator Dill Reintroduces Measure Carrying Penalties of $50 to $10,000 for Film Infringements; Failed Last Session

Motion picture theatre owners who hold over films for unauthorized exhibition may be prosecuted under the federal copyright law, according to the United States District Court at Boston. The decision, handed down late last week, is of considerable importance to theatre operators, establishing as it does that holdovers are not merely contract violations.

Coincidentally, Senator Dill introduced at Washington his legislative proposal for reconstructing the copyright law, thereby paving the way for renewed consideration of his measure which failed of action at the last session, following many battles between various factions in this industry and in others where the present law regulates certain activities.

Senator Dill's measure, carrying penalties of from $50 to $10,000 for film infringements, provides for organizations of copyright owners, which must file their membership lists and records of all copyrighted works controlled, with statements of all fees, charges or royalties collected from licensees.

Uniform License Charges

License charges would be uniform for all persons "within each class of users operating under practically the same economic conditions and desiring to make similar use of such works." Action is not expected, however, until Congress meets in regular session next January.

In cases of infringement, the infringing party shall be liable, under Senator Dill's measure, to an injunction only with respect to works proved to have been infringed and payment in lieu of actual damages and profits of damages in accordance with the provisions of the act, in assessing which the court may, in its discretion, allow the amounts stated as payment in full for all infringements by the infringing party of all works controlled by the copyright organization up to the date of suit.

The Dill bill, however, carries a provision that "whenever any such combination of copyright owners shall discriminate or propose to discriminate against any person within a class of users operating under practically the same economic conditions, or shall demand an unreasonable charge for license of the rights to any work which it permits to be used for public performance, then the Federal Trade Commission, on request of the person desiring a license, or demanding equal treatment, shall designate a representative who, together with the representative of the licensor and the representative of the person asking for a license or for equal treatment, shall constitute a committee of arbitration." Upon refusal of the copyright organization to appoint an arbitrator, the District of Columbia supreme court may order arbitration.

Court Decision Made on Appeal

In the Boston decision on holdovers, District Judge McLellan is said by the Copyright Protection Bureau to have clarified all doubts raised by the opinion handed down by the circuit court of appeals last April, in the cases brought by MGM and Educational against Bijou Theatre Co., Holyoke, Mass., "by sustaining in every respect the contentions advanced by the distributors that they were entitled to proceed under the Copyright Law for unauthorized exhibition arising out of holdovers for an additional day or days."

Allied States Association, under guidance of Abram F. Myers, its chairman and counsel, has been campaigning for copyright reforms over a long period. Frequently the association has based such pleas on the grounds that unauthorized holdovers of motion pictures do constitute breaches of contract, but are not violations of the copyright law.

The Boston case reported by the Copyright Protection Bureau, of which Jack Levin is in charge, has had an interesting history in the courts and has become a leading one in the law books covering this field of law, commencing with an opinion rendered in May, 1931, by Judge Morton (Vol. 50, Federal Reporter, 2nd series, p. 908) holding first that exhibition of a motion picture did not come within the protection of the copyright acts, and secondly, that even if it did, the remedy was only for breach of contract in the state courts, and therefore dismissing the complaints.

Then followed the opinion on appeal of the circuit court of appeals (Vol. 59, Federal Reporter, 2nd series, p. 70) reversing Judge Morton's decision and directing that the complaints be reinstated, if amended, but throwing doubt as to the nature of the amendments by a dictum discussing the possibility of the photoplay films being founded upon copyrighted dramatic compositions, novels, scenarios, or other literary material. The appellate court also avoided a definite commitment on the contract question.

Amended Complaints Filed

Amended complaints were thereupon filed. In denying the exhibitor's motion to throw out the amended bills of complaint upon the grounds (1) that they did not comply with the language of the circuit court of appeals in failing to allege the copyright; (2) that the right of action was only under the contract; and (3) that the amended complaints were too verbose, Judge McLellan resolved the various doubts raised by the ruling of the circuit court of appeals. He held, according to a statement issued this week by the Copyright Protection Bureau, that the circuit court of appeals' opinion could not be construed to require that the only copyright capable of protection against unauthorized exhibitions of films is that in the copyrighted "literary material" upon which the film is based, but that motion picture films, under the Constitution and the Copyright Acts, are entitled to independent copyrights, regardless of the literary material upon which they may be based, and these very copyrights secured independently for the films themselves will be protected against unauthorized exhibitions.

This part of the decision is said by the Bureau to be of vast importance to the motion picture industry as only a small percentage of copyrighted feature photoplay films and practically no short subject photoplay films are based upon copyrighted plays, novels, or scenarios, and even these are obviously changed to suit the necessities of motion picture production. Motion picture producers have always relied for protection on the independent copyrights secured by them for their films.

Concerning the contract point, Judge McLellan is reputed to have said that where the exhibition license is for one day, exhibition on that day exhausts the license given under the copyright. Exhibition on a second day constitutes a trespass upon the copyright, giving the plaintiff an election to sue under his copyright for its infringement. The court said:

> "The defendant was given a license to exhibit the films on one day, and an exhibition on that day, of course, gave rise to no action for an invasion of the plaintiff's copyright. When the defendants had exercised the license, it was exhausted, and the alleged exhibition on an addition day constituted both a breach of the contract and a trespass upon the monopoly conferred upon the plaintiff by the copyright."

Feeling that the confusion in the previous court had resulted from the simple reference to the subject matter as motion pictures without specifying whether the copyright was in the literary material or in the positive print of the celluloid film, Judge McLellan points out that the plaintiffs were very careful to state in the amended complaints that the copyright was in the film print itself, and he quoted with approval certain definitions evolved by the plaintiffs concerning the technical nature of motion picture films and motion picture exhibitions which for the first time are said by the Bureau to appear in a court opinion.

The Copyright Protection Bureau said this week that Judge McLellan's decision holds that distributors "are entitled to sue for infringement of their copyrights when their films are unauthorizedly shown by means of prints held over, switched, bicycled or subrented in disregard of exhibition licenses, or by prints illegally acquired from bootleg exchanges or other illegitimate sources, no question of a contract being at all involved in the latter cases."

Ask Quiz on Canadian Performing Rights Society

A petition for an investigation into the fees and operations of the Canadian Performing Rights Society was filed this week at Toronto with C. H. Cahan, secretary of state of the Dominion Government, by circuit and independent theatres. Under the provisions of the inquiries act through a clause in the Government amendment act, which became effective in June, 1931, the governor-in-council is authorized to stipulate the fees which may be imposed for performing privileges, if it is found license charges are excessive.

Complaints are made in the petition that the society is filing entire catalogues of musical works for registration of compositions before a fee can be collected; that the society's form of agreement with licensed theatres gives the society access to books and accounts and free attendance at all performances, and that the society's fees for broadcasting stations are excessive.

Warner Plans Big Campaign For Bette Davis in Picture

Warner plans an extensive advertising campaign for Bette Davis, youthful star, in "Ex-Lady," following the success of the "42nd Street Special" campaign just completed. The company has contracted for 17 pages of national fan paper space, in addition to newspaper space. Tieups have been arranged with six large manufacturers.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

B. P. SCHULBERG will never forget the night of the California earthquake. A fiery conference on the industry salary cut was being held between the Academy's emergency committee and a group of producers, including Jack Warner, Winfield Sheehan, B. B. Kahane and Harry Cohn. Locked in a room on the tenth floor of the Roosevelt hotel, Mr. Schulberg was detailing to the group operating losses suffered by the various companies as a result of the bank moratorium. Emphasizing with pounding fist and swinging arms, he had related how much money Paramount had lost; how much Metro was loser, how much Warners, how much Fox, and just as he exclaimed, "and as for RKO——." Schulberg never finished. The building lurched and the conferees hurried below to the fourth floor. Came another shock and they rushed to the lobby. A third, and they moved over to the parking lot abaft the Chinese theatre. Argument continued.

Mr. Schulberg should not have mentioned RKO in the first place.

Warners are making "Silk Express," a story based upon a thrilling situation in the silk industry, and the secretive shipping of silk by fast flyers from the Washington coast on the Pacific to the markets in New York, about which most people know nothing.

Because large shipments of silk are apt to have a serious depressing effect upon the market price, and because of the high value of a trainload of this lustrous fibre, silk carried by fast boat from Japan is secretly unloaded and placed aboard the Silk Express at a Washington port. This train, which is said to have the right of way even over a Presidential special, speeds from Seattle to New York without making a stop, in less than 50 hours. It rides under heavy armed guard; doors are strongly sealed, and no one is permitted either to leave or board the train. Regardless, Warners are going to stage a holdup.

RAISED EYEBROWS AND MEISTERSINGERS

The raised eyebrow which used to greet many motion picture advertisements is reverting to normal. Latest recognition of the changed order comes from the Hays office, which ought to know. It comes as a result of the advertising campaign on Mary Pickford's "Secrets," as engineered by Hal Horne, Al Lichtman's chief meistersinger.

It seems that Carl E. Milliken, secretary of MPPDA, surveyed the "Secrets" advertisement, and was so impressed by it that he sent the following memorandum to Frank J. Wilstach, official Hays contact with the advertising directors of member companies:

"Usually there is no news about advertising except bad news, but here is a fine example of real dignity and restraint. If you have seen the picture, you know they had an opportunity to get sensational. This they have avoided without losing the dramatic effect."

Executives of Hollywood studio unions who fought producers on the salary cut, which is now being arbitrated, claim that their crafts "are 99 per cent responsible for the actual production of motion pictures!"

Twenty-four different unions are involved in the scrap, including a bunch of good ol' fashioned hod carriers, an assortment of fancy and common laborers, some plumbers and metal workers, plasterers, upholsterers and machinists, molders, truckmen, steam fitters, painters, carpenters and whatnot. Evidently, they had been convinced by some of the pictures seen lately that their producers, stars, directors and writers had contributed the sum total of one per cent.

Jackson left New York recently and headed in his car for the Sunny South with four independent pictures and the will to win. At Gadsden, Ala., a 16-mile detour through deep yellow mud and slime nearly ended a career. Jack made it, however, and stopped at a coffee shop in the dark of night. When he returned, he found that his car had been stripped of everything. Personal baggage was gone and so was $600 in cash that had been hidden in a side pocket. Somehow, he negotiated New Orleans, where he ran smack into the bank holiday. With practically no chances of getting dates, there was nothing to do but sit down and wait.

Mr. Heyl awakened the other morning to the whimperings of 17 full-blooded pups. The New Canaan press featured the story on page one. The traditional Passion Play of Santa Clara, Cal., will be produced again on April 2. Written by Clay M. Produced intermittently since, Charles Warren Stoddard placed Santa Clara's production above Oberammergau. Jackie Coogan, famed as "The Kid" who once got a quarter of a million for a few pictures, now a freshman at the university, and practically forgotten by Hollywood, plays Jarom, a boy leper whom Christ healed.

The sharp dip taken by theatre receipts during the period of the national bank holiday is shown by the graph, based upon Motion Picture Herald's weekly compilation of grosses. It will be noted that in the weeks of February 11 and 18 receipts had been on the upward grade, followed by a decline in the week of the partial bank holidays in some states, and then the plunge in the national holiday. The 100 per cent line represents the average receipts in twelve cities from the beginning of the year. The cities are Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Hollywood, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Portland (Ore.) and San Francisco.

Warners Plan Ad Drive in Theatres

Warner Bros. has started a drive among exhibitors playing the Warner-First National product for intensive advertising, starting April 8, of the seven consecutive pictures being released from April 15 to May 27. Under the plan, the theatres will advertise all seven pictures in their lobbies in special displays carrying stills and copy. Heralds will carry similar announcements and weekly letters to each theatre's mailing list will feature the next attraction in addition to dealing with all seven. Special emphasis on the seven will be laid by the theatres in their regular daily advertising in the form of underliners, while institutional ads will also be used.

All Warner theatres will put the foregoing plan into operation starting the week of April 1. The seven pictures are "Central Airport," starring Richard Barthelmess, for release April 15; "Baby Face," starring Barbara Stanwyck with George Brent, April 22; "Elmer the Great," starring Joe E. Brown, April 29; "Picture Snatcher," starring James Cagney, with Alice White, May 6; "Lilly Turner," starring Ruth Chatterton and George Brent, May 13; "The Adopted Father," starring George Arliss with Bette Davis, May 20; "The Little Giant," starring Edward G. Full Handbook on Art of Screen in New Britannica

"The Theatre and Motion Pictures," a selection of articles from the new fourteenth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, has just been published by Encyclopædia Britannica, Inc., in New York and London.

It is the most complete and authoritative handbook of the art of the screen thus far produced, and is in fact the only reference work of the kind available, covering so many diverse aspects of the art and industry.

The Britannica policy of seeking sources from among the authoritative personnel of the institution discussed is reflected in the list of contributors to the fourteenth edition quoted in this volume on the theatre and the screen, including E. F. Albee, Lon Chaney, Cecil Blount DeMille, Lillian Gish, Alfred N. Goldsmith, Arthur Garfield Hays, Jesse L. Lasky, Charles Edward Kenneth Mees, Terry Ramsaye, Samuel L. Rothafel, Milton Sills, Lee Simonson, Otis Skinner, Joseph Urban, Max Reinhardt, Robert Edmon Jones, Kenneth Macgowan, and many others of equal rank.

Subjects discussed include: "Theatre Architecture," "Modern Theory of Design," "Production and Direction," "The Actor," "The Motion Picture Theatre," several subdivisions of the subject of picture production, picture technology and picture history. The volume also includes a section on theatre law, acoustics, make-up, costume design, pantomime, masks, the little theatre movement, color music and the dance. The work is illustrated with color plates from Britannica and many half-tone illustrations.

The book is equally useful as an independent reference-work, or as a guide to the Britannica material from which it is extracted.

The motion picture industry has in Dr. Franklin H. Hooper, American editor of Britannica, an especially enthusiastic friend. The edition of Britannica published contemporaneously with the rise of the screen dismissed the subject in about five hundred words under the title of "Cinematography." Today's Britannica presents the equivalent of a sizeable volume.

Duke Wellington Incorporates

Duke Wellington, widely known for his national service to the industry in lobby displays, has incorporated his business, formerly known as Display Craft, as a New York corporation. He is president, D. A. Poucher is treasurer and M. V. Blanchard is secretary. The new name is Duke Wellington, Inc, officing at 573 Fifth Avenue.

Mr. Wellington's displays are widely known to Broadway and sundry other avenues alongside, to say nothing about "the road" where his show goes out front to announce all that's on stage.

Mr. Poucher, the treasurer, is considerably known to the motion picture industry, with an experience beginning many and many a year ago and extending from Chicago's film row to Broadway, including all manner of corporations from Mutual to F.B.O. Mr. Poucher used to be able to strike a balance when the Japanese jugglers quit.

'AND IT'S BOUND FOR HOLLYWOOD'

Says DeCasseres of "20th Century"; Other Plays Come Up for Analysis as Film Possibilities

by BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

20TH CENTURY

Those two hatchet-men of English, those two enchanting blackguards, Ben Hecht and Charley MacArthur, aided and abetted by George Abbott and Philip Dunning, put over about the funniest, fastest, craziest, wildest piece of hooey that has been seen around the old Bear Pit north of Times Square for many a cock-eyed moon.

I rocked in my seat, so did the audience, and so will forty or fifty millions of people when it gets filmed. For "20th Century" is bound for Hollywood as sure as your Christmas jewelry will turn green in March.

It's a slaughtering series of caricatures wound around a grand piece of spoofing of the whole Broadway theatrical game. It is laid aboard the 20th Century Limited bound from Chicago to New York.

It's "Grand Hotel" done with the slapstick. The epithets, speeches, similes and wisecracks bang away like hail on your noodle. Especially the stuff that comes out of the press agent to Oscar Jaffe. This press agent is William Frawley. It's a howl for some Cagneyesque screen actor.

On board the 20th Century is Oscar Jaffe, a mixture of two celebrated producers, one of whom is dead. The son-in-law is still alive (guess once—that's right). He's coming back to New York broke on a mammoth production of "Joan of Arc." Moffatt Johnston's Jaffe is torrential—sentimental, bawling, cry-babyish.

On the train is Lily Garland (played rip-roaringly by Eugenie Leontovich), an old flame of Jaffe's, coming east from Hollywood. She is a super-Garbo—broke.

Then there is a crazy man on board (Etienne Girardot), who passes himself off for a millionaire and offers to recoup Jaffe's fortune with a walloping check. The cops and asylum officials are waiting for him at Cleveland.

Also there are two bewhiskered Passion Play players (the Christus and Judas) on board, broke flatter than the originals. There are a dozen other breezy minor characters besides.

That's the set-up. What takes place cannot be described. Only Ben and Charley can describe it. And I hope they'll make the screen story. It's a whirlwind!

GOODBYE AGAIN

At last Osgood Perkins has a part that suits him, suits me, suits the public and gives that intelligent and versatile actor an outlet for the energy that dances through his fingers, hands, hair and voice. Perkins is a dynamo—and yet he can pull the subtlest stuff when he wants to.

In the comedy—a rousing good one both for screen and stage—he plays Kenneth Bixby, a writer on a lecture tour with his secretary (yes, their relations are just precisely what darted through your head, Geraldine).

We discover them in a large bedroom (twins) in the Hotel Statler in Cleveland. It is literally a bedroom comedy, for most of Bixby's time is passed in bed.

He and his secretary are about to leave for Detroit when in pops Julia Wilson, married to a business bolony. Julia was Bixby's first offense long before he became famous. Julia is the sentimental, weepy type and seeks to renew relations (and does) with Bixby.

The husband (played superbly by Leslie Adams) has been so pounded by the market that he doesn't care much about what happens. (It would be a corking Rod LaRoque part.) But the family butts in to prevent a scandal, the secretary is jealous of Julia, and the third act becomes a very funny farce with Perkins in bed and the family nagging him to sign papers that will help divorce the Wilsons.

The end is a kiss-out—naturally.

It's a big hit and is full of laughs. With a swift cast, it ought to film well. The dialogue is crisp and barks.

RED PLANET

This play, by John L. Balderston and J. E. Hoare, failed; but it would make an overwhelmingly interesting and exciting picture for the screen—if some one had the courage to do it. It is epical, cosmical, satanically satiric.

Ray Fanshawe and his wife finally establish communication with Mars. He is a hard-boiled scientist. She is religious-humanitarian. The first message, on a screen, is tremendously thrilling. The thrill mounts to fever-heat on Earth when two facts are revealed—first, that Jesus is on Mars and is sending to us the Sermon on the Mount; second, that cosmic rays can be used for all motive power.

Scenes are shown of alternate hope and despair. Extras are hawked on the streets: "Christ on Mars!" Panic everywhere because of the worthlessness of coal mines, oil wells and electric energy.

The Prime Minister of England goes Golden Rule. Fanshawe and wife quarrel over the respective values of the messages.

While the alternate panic and the religious exaltation are at their height, a man comes into Fanshawe's laboratory and informs them that he is Mars. He has been sending the messages from high up in the Alps to get even with the human race—by playing upon it the supreme joke of the ages. The Fanshawes kill the satanic creature and themselves—mum's the word!

The last scene is general thanksgiving in Westminster Abbey. The people of this world believe the lie. Moral: a comforting lie is better than the raw truth.

Picture value, unknown.

HONEYMOON

Certainly Katherine Alexander, Thomas Mitchell and three or four other good actors ought to have made this little comedy, "Honeymoon," by Samuel Chotzinoff and George Backer, simmer; but it barely came to a boil.

There are, however, some angles in it for a good little sophisticated screen comedy. I can see Roland Young in the part of Bob Taylor, divorced from Mrs. Leslie Taylor, but who wants to marry her again. The lady, for several acts, says no.

But this is only half of the story. The big hunk of the apple concerns a honeymooning couple who come to visit Mrs. Taylor (it's in Paris). They are already quarrelling. She has her eye elsewhere, and he has trips to London "to paint."

Well, the kid finds consolation in Mrs. Taylor. The young wife is necking around Nice with a film actor. After all this, things come out as they generally do in the third act: hunky-dory. No one expected any window-jumping anyhow.

Nothing very exciting here; but there are two good sex-angles and four parts for rubber-tired Hollywood performers.

Picture value, 50 per cent.

A LITTLE BLACK BOOK

"The Merry-Go-Round," or all is not hunky-dory in Washington, has stirred 'em up.

"The Little Black Book," by Harold Sherman, staggers around that famous little book of customers that every super-bootlegger in Washington is supposed to have. Naturally, this story, then, is George Raft from beginning to end.

There is a guy from a small town named Centerville who comes to Washington to be a clerk in one of Uncle Sam's offices. Centerville wants a state highway. The clerk tries to get it for his town, but it's no go until he gets his claws on a bootlegger's black book. Well, say, Centerville could have the Treasury and the Corcoran Art Gallery then.

There are love-interest, politicians and bootleggers beyond count—all after the little book. And Bang! Bang!—plenty of it.

It's hectic stuff and will go into the films unless the crime wave in pictures subsides, which it will not so long as we Americans need our booze.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned. —THE EDITOR

Pick Up

(Paramount)

Romantic Drama

Here's a romantic drama that contains sufficient entertainment elements to make a stronger than ordinary program attraction. Undoubtedly the predominating showmanship feature is the teaming of Sylvia Sidney and George Raft, spotted in roles that take adequate advantage of their personalities and talents.

Being modern, easily understood, appealing in all its essentials and possessing a certain novelty of plot, "Pick Up" is so constructed that love interest, sympathy, drama, topical comedy (made more potent by slangy, breezy, dialogue), colorful adventure, bold flirtation, menace, quick action and melodramatic suspense are logically included. These features should be emphatically exploited, for, as they are all bound together in a comprehensive whole, they constitute entertainment that should appeal with equal effectiveness to both men and women. While most of the early part of the show is intimately romantic—Mary and Harry living together though unmarried—clever direction has kept the arrangement far enough away from the "too sexy" borderline. Rather, the relation creates sympathetic understanding for Mary and Harry.

Out of jail, Mary, determined to split with her husband, Jim, who is still behind the bars, stumbles into Harry's taxi cab. Broke, rain-soaked, she plays on his sympathies, goes home with him, but quickly lets him know that "monkey business" is out. She's not a regular pick up.

Comes a job in the Foster Taxi Company, Mary's growing affection for the smart but dumb mug, Harry finds them continuing their relation. Learning more about this odd guy, she urges him to buy a suburban garage and frames a gag with the unsuspecting Foster to get them both fired.

The garage is bought, and there's happiness and prosperity for the pair in the little suburb. Tony keeps Jim informed of what Mary is doing as Muriel sets out to win Harry. Two menaces to Mary become tense as Harry tells her he is going to marry Muriel and Jim shows up in the little love nest. Although she has obtained an annulment, Mary sacrifices her happiness for Harry's safety and moves out with Jim. Muriel tumbles down Harry's dream castles by refusing to marry him.

Finding the annulment papers, threatening Mary and promising revenge on Harry, Jim is locked in a room by his erstwhile wife as she phones the police. Stark drama pops out of newspaper headlines and Harry wakes up to the true state of affairs. Hocking everything he owns, he engages the sly Turner to defend the girl. A dramatic courtroom scene has Mary on the spot as Jim testifies that she helped him escape from jail and is equally responsible for killing a guard. But a clever Turner ruse wins for the girl and Harry.

"Pick Up" is the type of entertainment that shouts for extra effort. Stress the timely human interest of the story. Use the catchy copy in the dialogue. Create the impression, which the picture justifies, that there is plenty of interesting novelty. The title suggest all sorts of intriguing gag possibilities. Go after strong adult business on this one. You can afford to ignore the youngsters. Build for strong matinee business with the women.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Fast Workers

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Comedy Drama

Flying repartee of a definitely sophisticated turn lends the chief significance to the title, "Fast Workers," rather than the fact that John Gilbert and Robert Armstrong are the acknowledged speed kings as riveters, the picture having its orgin in the play "Rivets."

Gilbert as a shirt-sleeved construction man hanging to a topmost girder of a skyscraper is something of a departure, but that is after all incidental to the story of two men and a girl, a wise girl. And the girl, Mae Clarke, does a superb job of acting in a role that is scarcely sympathetic. So does Gilbert, as expected.

Indeed, the theme leaves a sympathetic role for no one. Armstrong is "taken in" by the girl who has been Gilbert's but has found him quite set against such a subject as marriage. Gilbert disillusions Armstrong, who sees red and arranges an "accidental" plunge for Gilbert that all but spells the end for his pal. Both Armstrong, who has married Mae, and Gilbert tell Mae they're through with her. And that leaves the story approximately where it began.

Gilbert and Armstrong are the names that should help bring patronage above the ordinary run, but Miss Clarke's handling of the role assigned to her should be the leading reason for the second-day attendance.

The story is thoroughly spiced from beginning to end, in theme and dialogue, both essentially metropolitan. Flipping silver dollars at girls, in the street and in the hospital, scarcely encourages mothers to bring the "dear kiddies." —ROVELSTAD, New York.

The White Sister

(MGM)

Drama

This picture is not of a type to be treated with ballyhoo. Of prime importance to exhibitors is the fact that identified with the picture are two of the biggest drawing names, Helen Hayes and Clark Gable, and the ever-popular theme of romance and frustrated love. F. Marion Crawford's story of the soldier and the nun who were separated by intangible religious vows is unfolded in an exceedingly delicate manner.

A little too much footage has been spent in dwelling upon the intricacies of the church rituals but a sincere effort has been made to portray them faithfully. The pictorial values are striking and complete. The picture has been handsomely set, money apparently being no object with the producers, and the photography is adequate.

The story deals with the daughter of a Prince who has become embittered over the fact that his wife left him for another man shortly after the birth of her daughter. The Prince is resolved that his daughter shall not follow in her mother's footsteps. Accordingly, as the picture opens, we find Miss Hayes affianced to an entirely insipid young man whom she obviously does not love, but dutifully respects. Through a motor accident, Mr. Gable, dashing young aviator, meets Miss Hayes. Her father takes an immediate dislike to him, even forbids his presence in the house, but his daughter has fallen hopelessly in love. By the same convenient means of a motor accident, the Prince is killed, and Mr. Gable is left to pursue his amorous attentions without fear of paternal disapproval. Miss Hayes grieves over her father's death, but eventually the soldier's love makes her forget and they prepare for marriage. War intervenes, however, and when she receives official notice of Gable's death, Miss Hayes takes nun's vows. Gable returns but too late. Her vows to the church cannot be rescinded and the young officer nobly goes his way. An air raid brings mortal wounds and the picture ends with Miss Hayes resolving to find peace and solace in the life to which she has devoted herself.

Miss Hayes' performance is wistful and tactful. Her histrionic ability comes to the

THE BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS FOR FEBRUARY

The absence of ties among the productions turning in the largest grosses during February results in a list of only six pictures as the Box Office Champions for that month. Two of these, Paramount's "The Sign of the Cross" and United Artists' "The Kid from Spain," were also among the "champions" for January, with the former improving on its earlier position in the group by winning second place in the February ranking. In type, last month's box office selections show considerable variety, without, however, including straight comedy. Spectacle holds prominent representation in Fox's "Cavalcade" and "The Sign of the Cross," while the Cantor vehicle contributes musical comedy. The others, even Warner Brothers' George Arliss production, "The King's Vacation," offer drama with about equal emphasis on the romantic and comic elements of the narrative.

fore in each expressive sequence, although there are scenes in which it appears difficult for her to register sincerity. Mr. Gable is forceful. One of the best performances is turned in by that veteran trouper, Louise Closser Hale, in the role of the girl's companion. Why the producers brought Miss Hale into almost every sequence up to the middle of the picture and then forget her entirely, is an enigma. Lewis Stone is excellent in the very minute part as the Prince. For the rest of the players, Edward Arnold stands out in his characterization of the priest.

For the most part this is not a man's picture, although they may find the air sequences both exciting and interesting. Scenes in the prison camp, including the burning of cholera-ridden corpses, may be liked by the more morbid male minds. The departure of the Italian troops for the front is shown in thrilling scenes that are packed with color. On the whole, however, the action is slow, particularly in the convent scenes. The women should like the picture and especially the heart-breaking love scenes between Miss Hayes and Gable.

There is no reason for leaving the children at home, though the subject matter may be beyond them.—AYER, New York.

A Shriek in the Night

(Allied)

Mystery, Romance, Comedy

Here's a show that should easily hold its own in any competition. Basically a murder mystery, it has been so handled that real romance, drama, suspense and surprising developments are equally important. And laugh-inspiring comedy dominates everything else. Developing a newspaper reporter twist, it smartly skips all the pitfalls that have engendered yowls of protest when, heretofore, members of that craft have been made the subjects of screen stories. It is so timed that laughs always drown gasps. The romance cleverly picks up in spots where it is most necessary and most appreciated. The mystery is well concealed and suspense forcefully built up. The novel finale sent the crowd out of the theatre enthusiastically approving.

Practically every feature except the murder of the janitor has been handled with a comedy twist. Continued laughter indicated that regular audiences will have no difficulty in catching the spirit of the work. Good dialogue supporting the topical action, the preview crowd got lots of fun out of the inspector's probing of the crime. His treatment of the bewildered Wilfred, his assistant, and the dumb maid, who read detective stories in the midst of real crime, added to the merriment. They howled at the antics of Patricia and Ted, sweethearts but rival reporters. Before they recovered from Ted's stealing of Pat's exclusive story and making it a scoop for himself, her framing of a fake story which he phoned in to Pat's old paper as a means of getting her job back for her had them in a new series of laughs. The colored maid's terrorized refusal to have anything to do with a morgue evoked plenty of mirth. The climax that had Pat on a spot and everybody else but the timid Wilfred up an alley held them in tense expectancy until it suddenly turned into a riot of unanticipated mirth.

"A Shriek in the Night" has the kind of entertainment that should amuse patrons of houses in the cities as well as outside. All that is necessary is an aggressive campaign. Frankly, in this writer's opinion, the picture has everything that the "fans" want at this particular time. The cast gives you some real names from Ginger Rogers and Lyle Talbot all the way down the line to Louise Beaver (that fat colored gal) to talk about. In the show they will give your patrons all they desire in mystery, romance, drama, suspense, unlooked for thrills and most of all—unending laughs.

There's plenty to intrigue and satisfy the interest of both men and women. What is probably more important is that the production is also okay for youngsters.

Probably the most effective way of driving home the full merit of this show will be to put your personal endorsement on it—guaranteeing that anyone who is not satisfied with what you say about it will have his money cheerfully refunded.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

After the Ball

(Gaumont British)

Comedy

[The following comment on "After the Ball," as seen in London by Bernard Charman, is timely in view of the current showing at the Seventh Avenue Roxy in New York.]

In the paradoxical world of films, to say that a picture is "different" is to label it as just another cut to the same old pattern, so that it would be hardly correct to apply the adjective to this hour's glimpse of the lighter side of diplomacy. There is, however, a novelty about the piece, in that it is set in an unusual background—the important atmosphere of a disarmament conference—even if the thin story follows conventional lines.

So that gives you an exploitation lead right off (or do we Europeans flatter ourselves in thinking that you are interested in our continental politics?), suggesting that you can capitalize on the atmosphere of Geneva, with all the pomp and glory that surrounds these vital meetings of the nations. Don't let your customers take it too seriously, though. Rather stress the fact that woman's wiles are proof against the most serious of political matters, and that when wives want fun diplomacy goes by the board.

If you are impatient to know who's in the picture, you may be pleased to read that it has your own Esther Ralston in the lead, an Esther who has lost none of the lightness of performance that formerly made her the young man's fancy. She's good for the big lights, and should make worthwhile all the publicity you can afford her. With the honorable exception of Basil Rathbone, whom you may remember, the names of the cast in support won't mean much to your public, though each member, by performing with just the touch of exaggeration that the play demands, contributes an equal share to its success. Especially good is Clifford Heatherley, playing the self-important delegate of one of those tin-pot little states, all puffed with pride, that seem to want international politics to center round their petty selves.

The story is about the philanderings of a light hearted "king's courier" from London, bringing valuable dispatches to the British delegation. The courier lives for feminine attention, and contrives, all unknowingly, to begin an affair with the wife of his diplomat friend. It's all very complicated, but eventually wifie proves her virtue (to say nothing of her cunning), though not before hubbie has had a nasty jolt, and Lothario departs to further amorous adventures. The wit in the dialogue suggests that the appeal of the film will be particularly to the more sophisticated audiences of the big cities. A sprinkling of risque lines adds emphasis to the suggestion.

The picture has been directed with a light hand, and is distinguished by top grade photography and recording.—CHARMAN, London.

Hertha's Erwachen

Hertha's Awakening

(Protex)

Drama

A convincing production is this Ufa story of misguided love and its consequences. The theme is as old as life itself; the strength of the picture is rather in the girl's mental anguish in reaching a decision as to what to do about it, when her realization of the coming event is followed by the return, address unknown, of her letter to her sweetheart. While that should be the center of the exhibitor's appeal for patronage, at the same time for his own guidance it should be made known that the immediate solution finally is simplified for her when "Old Schultheiss," a friend in need, opens his home to her until the child is born.

Without emphasis upon the provincial environment, and its gossips and its rigid puritanism that sees a "scarlet letter" for all in the indiscretion of one, the theme would be less effective, and so this should be noted in pre-informing your patrons.

An explanatory introduction clears the way for the non-German patron, and titles in dialogue have been superimposed. Commendable as is this device, its effect would be heightened were the English sentences better attuned to the American audience; in part the wording is too obviously a translation, and where idiomatic American is used, the departure sometimes is too complete to ring true. Nevertheless, it does make easy the following of the development.

The names should mean considerable to the box office where German productions are frequently shown. Hans Brausewetter, youthful and likable, is the "breezy youngster from the big city," as the caption had it, and Toni van Eyck is in the title role.

The story is more a "Keeper of the Bees," Clara Bow's "Money Maker" of F.B.O. days, than a "Life Begins." Yet the censors took it upon themselves to eliminate a few bits of the dialogue.

It is a sincere pledge of marriage that Karl Christians makes to Hertha before his return to the Berlin offices of his company, but he loses his job and tears up his letter to Hertha when his landlady advises that he first find reemployment. The story itself loses its ring of sincerity, however, with the sequence showing Karl in an affair with another. When Hertha's friend brings him news of her motherhood, however, he returns to his own.

There is a rugged, homely strength to the picture, slow-moving in spots, but that also is typical of the deliberate style of the German picture and for that reason does not detract from it. The production obviously is for only adults.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

A UFA production distributed by Protex Trading. Adapted from an original story by Hertha von Gebhardt. Directed by Gerhard Lamprecht. Release date, March 10, 1933. Running time, 82 minutes.

Comedy

Rough-and-ready comedy, climaxing in a battle royal with seemingly the entire Pacific fleet throwing fists in a marathon dancehall, keeps things moving at a rapid pace, in a production which on one or two occasions gives promise of lifting itself above the usual but just falls short.

Abundance of action and fun of the more obvious and uproarious kind can be assured the patron, but the most efficacious direction of approach should be in the names of the leads, James Dunn and Sally Eilers. Both do a commendable job with a jigsaw story in which the aim at times apparently is to turn the pieces upside down just when they have been correctly fitted. A drunk is permitted to stumble through ten times the justified footage; Will Stanton's work in this role would have been far more effective had the amount of it been reduced by that proportion. Remarks by nearby patrons confirmed our thoughts in that regard.

The title means little, but perhaps as much as the development of the story itself. Shore leave debarks Dunn, Sammy Cohen and Frank Moran at San Diego. Dunn meets Sally, non-swimming swimming instructor, and they're guests of the inebriate Stanton until Dunn sets out to find a place for Sally to sleep after she's lost her job. Dunn's intentions do a Finnegan but wind up honorable. Victor Jory enters as the suave but blackjack armed hotel proprietor with Sally as his target. He tricks Dunn by cutting in on the conversation when Dunn phones from San Francisco and Dunn returns to tear up the place and the romance. Sally, defiant, accepts Jory's proposal to enter the crooked marathon. Dunn comes back and after the pug-uglies manhandle him the "fleet" comes to the rescue and he plants a wedding ring on Sally's fourth finger, reading from right to left. And that's the story.

Besides the names, Sammy Cohen's assorted swan dives in an oversized bathing suit and the classical bent of the strongarmed Frank Moran, there is the "everybody-likes-a-sailor" appeal to capitalize.

The ultra-modern flavor of dialogue and sequences, in spots, and the absence of "anchors aweigh" material make it essentially a production for adult consumption, despite the engaging bit with Buster Phelps.—Rovelstad, New York.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Raoul Walsh. Story and screen play by Marguerite Roberts and Charlotte Miller. Photographed by Arthur Miller. Sound recorder, George Leverett. Art director, Joe Wright. Assistant director, Horace Hough. Additional dialogue by Bert Hanlon and Ben Ryan. Release date, March 10, 1933. Running time, 78 minutes.

Drama

The motion picture producing organization of Soviet Russia, Soyuzkino, seems virtually incapable of taking cognizance of "art for art's sake." Every production they turn out is buried to the hilt in propaganda, Soviet propaganda, Five-Year Plan propaganda. However, it is true that in this instance there has been attempted, with reasonable success, an injection of real story blood, dramatic vitality usually conspicuous by its absence in the regular run of Soyuzkino product.

Of course, the theme essentially is indicative of the operation of the industrial aspect of the Plan, having its center among a community of workers engaged in the construction of a giant turbine, as part of a counterplan, which, we understand, is in the nature of extra effort on the part of the community.

Four chief characters are involved: the secretary of the factory group, its engineer, the latter's young wife, also a worker, and an old mechanic who heartily disapproves of all this new collectivism and general enthusiasm, is steeped in his old fashioned methods and his desire for the good bottle. About the nuclear drama of these people hums, in background atmosphere, the collective activity which is the new Russia, rather significant and authentic.

There are two central points of dramatic interest, the first, romantic in a sense, the love of the engineer and his wife, a phase unusual in Soviet production; the second the struggle of the old mechanic, played by Vladimir Gardin much in the manner of Emil Jannings, with strong dramatic ability. When the turbine, in the construction of which Gardin has been responsibly involved, is found off-center and useless, the engineer and his fellow workers blame Gardin's love of the bottle. Above his machine is raised a flag, imprinted with the word "shame," indicative of Gardin's culpability. Eventually, it is discovered that a former engineer, in altering calculations, had been responsible. Happiness returns when a new turbine, hastily constructed under Gardin's supervision, functions satisfactorily.

To metropolitan audiences, in search of film fare in a measure different, somewhat unusual, this picture may appeal. The dialogue is in Russian, but superimposed subtitle translations, practically continuous, make it possible to follow the sequence. There is definite drama inherent in the picture, well handled, and with good performances making for greater effectiveness.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced in U. S. S. R. by Soyuzkino. Distributed by Amkino. Directed by Frederick Ermler and Sergei Yutkevitch. Photographed by A. Ginsburg and I. Volk. Music by Dmitri Shostakovitch. English titles by Nathan Adler. Release date, March 10, 1933. Running time, 75 minutes.

The Man They Couldn't Arrest

(Gaumont British)

Mystery

Insofar as winning the attention of the American audience to this picture is concerned, its definite "Englishness" must be taken into consideration. Accents of the English that is England, no matter how much more accustomed to them the average audience here is today than yesterday, are still strange, the choice of idiom still sometimes less than understandable.

The picture is nevertheless a good mystery, employing to good advantage the technique of the unusual, the mechanics of the mysterious. The generally rapid pace has its halting moments because of the too extensive use of dialogue sequences which, in their length, are not completely necessary to the movement of the story.

The exhibitor has, in this instance, comparatively little in the matter of names with which to entice audiences. The only one which can have any familiarity to the American patron, and that rather little, is Gordon Harker, an able character actor, who here performs capably, but unfortunately in a rather minor role. The others, though generally able, are unknown here. Particularly good is the work of Robert Farquharson, as the nefarious and foreign-accented leader of the far-reaching gang pursued avidly but with little success by Scotland Yard. The exhibitor will necessarily have to concentrate on the mystery, the popular Scotland Yard involvement in the plot, and pay little attention to the cast, with the possible exception of Harker.

Hugh Wakefield, who heads the cast, is, in the opinion of the Yard, a member of the gang. Actually, he is assisting the Yard, for reasons not altogether clear. Scientifically inclined, his method is the employment of a highly ingenious device which detects, via radio, conversations in far away places. Maneuvering his range finder, he picks up the conversations of the gang, traces their movements, warns the police anonymously, and evades arrest by the police, murder by the gang.

Romance enters actively when Wakefield discovers that the father of the girl he loves, supposedly a wealthy business man, is one of the gang principals. Two murders, pursuits, self-closing doors and the like add to the general excitement.

By playing down the English origin and English flavor of the picture and concentrating on the mystery and romance elements, the exhibitor may do something with the picture. It is fairly good entertainment.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced by Gainsborough. Distributed by Gaumont-British. Directed by T. Hayes Hunter. Release date, March 11, 1933. Running time, 70 minutes.

Amusing

There is amusement and liveliness in this Oswald the Rabbit cartoon, in which Oswald and his girl, touring in the desert, are surprised by the sheik, who steals the girl. Oswald's rescue attempts in the dark confines of a pyramid, with dancing mummies and the like, provide a few minutes of amusement.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Pictorially Splendid

The beauties of the Island of Sicily, off the toe of the Italian boot, are pictured herein with noteworthy effect. This number of the Magic Carpet group of travel subjects gains rather than suffers through the absence of the accompanying dialogue generally used with the type. Beautiful panoramic views of the island are interspersed with closeup shots of the peasants who inhabit it, who are seen vividly at work making their famed puppets, dragging netloads of giant tuna fish, and at play, enjoying a native dance. A particularly worthwhile subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Comedy Melodrama

While the title means little, even for a short feature, there's something of interest in this Vanity comedy, despite spotty lagging. Monty Collins is made the goat of the Club when he's chosen to run for mayor in the face of threats of a racketeer gang. There's the customary playing of basketball with a bomb, but the picture finds a fresh note in the studio players' rush across town to the rescue.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Wreckety Wrecks

(MGM)

Fair

Only fair comedy results when Ben Blue and Billy Gilbert, as a pair of witless taxi drivers, make frantic efforts to hide the body of the man they believe they have run down, which is in reality but a clothing store dummy. A spot of comedy here and there does not successfully pull the subject out of the ordinary class.—Running time, 19 minutes.

SHORT FILMS SUPPLANTING DOUBLES

York territory to determine the public reaction. However, and despite opposition of certain Loew executives to dual policies, it is expected that Loew's and the other companies will postpone until next season any action to order wholesale cessation of double feature activities at their theatres.

Double featuring is not considered financially unsound insofar as theatre operating expenses are concerned. Exhibitors generally find that duals cost no more, even less, than a single policy because the second feature is usually a "B," "C," or "D" attraction, with rentals lower than the aggregate cost of corresponding footage in short subject form. There are exceptions, however.

Foreseeing a possibility of a shortage in feature product within the next few months has led exhibitors in the New York territory—representing about 14 per cent of the country—and elsewhere to launch an extensive investigation into the double feature situation with a view to effecting their elimination immediately on condition that similar action is taken by the circuits. Prominent in this movement are the Allied Theatres of New Jersey; Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, in which most of New York's independents are members; and the following independent or unaffiliated circuit owners: Lawrence Bolignino, president of Consolidated Amusements; A. H. Schwartz, president of Century Circuit; Jack Springer, Leo Brecher, Samuel Rinzler, Louis Frisch, Lee Ochs, Sam Cocalis, Jack Hattem and Jack Steinman.

Cessation of what are described as "unfair" circuit activities, such as ten-cent morning matinees, at downtown and de luxe theatres is said by exhibitor leaders in many cities to be necessary for complete elimination of doubles at neighborhood houses.

Seek Return to Duals

New York exchanges would force the twin bill issue by getting exhibitors in the territory to agree to a cessation of doubles and to effect increased box office scales.

Exhibitors in New York, Chicago, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Newark, Memphis, Detroit and elsewhere have indicated complete dissatisfaction with doubles as a permanent practice.

Theatre attendance has shown an increase in towns where there has been a return to single features by general agreement. There is said to be more money passing over Chicago's box office windows since owners voted unanimously against doubles last October. Not one house has reverted to singles.

However, there has suddenly cropped up in Chicago a situation which might place in jeopardy the citywide ban on duals. Agitation for the return of doubles in that city is said to be under way, sponsored by a certain group of independent exhibitors, who are understood to have been holding secret meetings. For the most part, these operators control small neighborhood houses. Five six-reel westerns, titles undetermined, are understood to have been cut to 4,500 feet, or under, by this Chicago group, and are being used on dual bills. As a result, first runs, exchanges and owners of larger neighborhoods are protesting. The situation is ticklish.

In a few zones in Greater New York where doubles were dropped, exhibitors reported that business did not drop off after the change.

Dallas owners are contemplating retaliation against downtown runs that have launched dual programs. Southern California exhibitors are conducting a campaign, and Memphis owners recently won out in their fight with circuit runs. Allied in Michigan, however, is unable to make any headway in its anti-dual battle throughout Michigan. In Cleveland, clubwomen have joined in the general denunciation of dual showings.

Sections where the practice of double featuring is gaining new ground include Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Milwaukee, Portland, Ore., Tampa, San Francisco, Buffalo, Providence, Salt Lake City, Spokane, San Antonio, Dallas and Detroit. Also in the Southwest the practice is reported to be spreading.

Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures, with headquarters in Los Angeles, reported that double billing is growing on the West Coast and that it is doubling business at his own circuit of 18 theatres. "However," he added, "I believe it is a good thing only as a temporary expedient." Mr. Lesser said independent distributors benefit mostly by dual bookings.

As to the effect of the practice on rentals, he said that normally, rentals are usually figured at 25 per cent of the theatre's gross, but under present conditions, and on a policy of twin bills, rentals have been scaled down to as low as 12½ per cent of the intake per feature.

Louis Brock, associated producer of shorts for RKO, said from Hollywood that a series of good three-reel comedies can be made a most effective producer-weapon against double programs, but only in a series, so exhibitors might steadily advertise them as special attractions.

Warners' Tries Single Film Plan

The greatest boon to the industry during 1933 will be the elimination of double bills, according to William Le Baron, Paramount production executive in Hollywood. They confuse the minds of the patron, he said. Having had too many double bills, the fan becomes satiated and stays away. The exhibitor has a hard time exploiting two shows, while the producer's losses in rentals force him to cheapen his product. "The producer of shorts is hardest hit," he concluded. "Many have had to quit."

On the other hand, an executive of one of the large producing companies in New York, said this week that he looked to double featuring as one of the most logical solutions to the industry's problems.

"If people are going to continue to pay the prices they are paying at present—and they're still too high in most localities—they will demand something for that money. They are not satisfied with only one feature picture. They want two and the day will come when companies are going to be forced to institute double featuring on a wholesale scale and, at the same time, drop their prices."

Probably the most important current development came last week when a complete reversal of program policy got under way in the Warner Brothers houses in Essex county in New Jersey, with doubles abandoned for the Sunday, Monday and Tuesday program in the theatres changing three times a week. The order had been issued three weeks ago. If the experiment succeeds in bringing back certain types of patronage, the Jersey zone plans to extend the policy.

The Warner executives said they base their new policy on these considerations: The average double feature adds a tedious and cheap production to a good entertainment, and makes the programs too long. The mother who brought her children to the 7 o'clock show stays home or goes to the lower-priced matinees alone. The long double feature no longer attracts those parents with very young children who have put them to bed by 8:30 and are ready for two hours recreation.

Although not mentioned in the announcement, it is understood that a threatening shortage of product had something to do with Warners' decision.

The Skouras interests have dropped duals in many of their New Jersey situations and Allied of New Jersey is said to have proposed to Skouras and Warner theatre executives that they draw up a single-bill agreement.

The widespread double feature policy in Kansas City and thereabouts recently prompted John C. Moffitt, motion picture editor of the Kansas City Star, to editorialize as follows:

"Eventually this double bill tendency will have a bad effect on screen entertainment, since it discourages the discriminating audience. Double bills are not for those who get enthusiastic over favorite stars or certain types of stories."

As for the attitude of independent producers, John R. Freuler, president of Freuler Film Associates, recently said that in view of the admission cutting movement, the only hope for the small neighborhood house is to give more for the money—which means two features in place of one. "B" and "C" houses are double featuring more heavily since the "A" houses started to cut prices said Mr. Freuler.

Ray Johnston's Monogram Pictures recently decided to flood the country—through its local state rights franchise holders—with circulars telling about the economic benefits of double pictures on one program. "Like the baseball fans," said the message to theatre owners, "the moviegoers are bargain hunters. Announce a twin bill, unfurl the double-header banner and they come early and in large numbers to fill all the seats and send the receipts soaring."

An outline of the double feature situation throughout the nation follows:

Shorts Take Place of Duals

In the Birmingham territory there is considerable evidence of a growing dependence upon shorts and novelties to go with single features. Several houses throughout Alabama have already announced a return to singles. However, patrons of neighborhoods indicate a preference for duals.

Dallas Houses Resuming Doubles

The double bills have again come to the fore in Dallas, at The Old Mill and the Melba, both first-runs.

Action Taken Against Duals on Coast

In Los Angeles, members of the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California agreed to canvass each section of the territory to spread propaganda for restoration of single features.

Memphis Acts Against Practice

Down town theatres ended dual featuring last month by agreement. Neighborhood exhibitors, led by M. A. Lightman, MPTOA president, thereby won their fight. The independent neighborhoods had threatened to cancel contracts.

Warners Lead Offensive in Jersey

Warner theatres of Newark in the northern division of New Jersey agreed to drop double features the first three days of each week. Patrons' complaints are said to have prompted the decision.

Duals Not Used in Oklahoma City

Exhibitors of Oklahoma City and thereabouts do not believe that any trend toward duals is in the offing.

Policy Holds Sway in Detroit

Double billing is the rule in Detroit neighbor-

CHICAGO

Plenty of talk locally about calling a moratorium on theatre operation as these lines are written. The week of the bank holiday was a tough one for houses all over the city. Surprisingly, business in the week after the banks were opened was equally off—one of the worst weeks on record.

W. R. Catlow of the Catlow theatre, Barrington, Ill., instituted a wide exploitation campaign in connection with the reopening of his house following extensive remodeling and the installation of RCA-Victor high fidelity photophone equipment. "Radio City comes to Barrington" is the way he publicized the new sound equipment.

Jack Friedman has resigned from Capitol Film Corporation to join the Jack Rose booking circuit.

Al Steffes made a quick visit to Chicago last week, but explained he was here on purely personal business.

E. J. Barnard has been named sales manager at the Paramount exchange, succeeding Walter Wiens, who has been promoted to manager of the company's Denver branch.

Joe Maloy, brother of Tom Maloy, business manager of the operators' union, died last week. Maloy was examiner of motion picture operators in the department of gas and electricity.

W. Beacham of 416 Maple street, Marengo, Ill., has opened a new theatre in that city.

hood houses. A check made on a list of 57 houses there for a week showed only one house that billed single for seven days; 21 ran two features every day; 27 billed double for four or more days; seven billed double on less than four days. One first run, the RKO Downtown, has been double billing one performance a week by screening the feature of the coming week at the end of the Wednesday night show. Allied in Michigan now regards the situation as hopeless. However, in independent neighborhood quarters it was said that business has shown marked improvement following restoration of twin features.

No Doubles in New Orleans

Double features have not as yet reached New Orleans, and in the opinion of exchanges and exhibitors will not, at least not very soon.

Ban on Duals Successful in Chicago

Chicago exhibitors are satisfied with the experimental banning of double feature showings. Theatre attendance has even shown an increase in dozens of neighborhood houses, and despite lower admission scales, more money is being grossed. However, there are reports that a group of independent neighborhood houses are preparing to return to double features.

Women Oppose Policy in Cleveland

The Motion Picture Division of the Federated Women's Clubs of Cleveland went on record as being vigorously opposed to double features.

At Standstill in Omaha

Double feature programs are at a standstill in Omaha territory. Only one first run house there, the World, is operating on a policy of two feature pictures on the same program for a seven day run. In the neighborhoods, however, the twin policy is almost universally in vogue. It has gained but a slight foothold in the outstate territory, playing probably 35 per cent of those houses. Running double bill programs since Thanksgiving, 1931, at the Omaha World, Manager Ives reports it has proven very successful. The World is called a combination "downtown and suburban family theatre."

None in Delaware

There are no double bill theatres in Delaware. Occasionally one of the independent houses down state presents a twin feature.

Practice Growing in San Antonio

Double features, unknown in San Antonio until recently, are gradually making their appearance. Two theatres are using them at present, the Empire and the State. The Majestic, RKO, tried one week of double features, but gave up the idea.

Duals Not Satisfactory at Seattle

In Seattle, dual bills at the Fox Fifth Avenue theatre do not seem to be achieving the desired results. Grosses for the past six weeks have been decidedly below normal for this key house, despite a 40 cent top.

Policy Preferred in Spokane

Practically every second and third run theatre in Spokane is showing double bill programs at least once a week to attract patrons. Managers say it works.

Competition Brings on Duals

To meet the competition of other houses which have cut prices, the Majestic and Paramount theatres at Providence are running a neck and neck race to see which can show the "snappiest" double-feature programs.

THRIFTY FRENCH CHARGE FOR "ALL OUTDOORS" TOO

The Municipal Council of the city of Paris, France, has gone, in a manner of speaking, into the motion picture business. Where heretofore it was customary to charge film producers for the use of Paris streets as picture sets, the council has recently compiled a complete scale of charges: $5 per day per operator, plus 40 cents for each actor, super or other person engaged; 80 cents for each animal; special fees for carts, vans, etc., carrying equipment. After nightfall, all charges are doubled, but the council fails to indicate why. For filming public places as background, text of scenario must be submitted to the chief conservator of promenades. In other words: Stay in your own backyard!

Gaining Ground in Salt Lake

Double bills at Salt Lake City's theatres seem to be gaining in popularity. Practically all second-runs and suburbans are now advertising double bills.

Buffalo Starts Using Doubles

Double features are again taking hold at Buffalo. The Lafayette and Shea's Century, which started them at Christmas, are continuing the policy, and a second-run downtown house has announced a triple bill.

Situation Not Serious in Denver

The double bill situation in the Denver territory is not as serious as in other sections. One of the exchanges there estimated that 50 to 60 per cent of the theatres in the territory use double features. In Denver less than half a dozen houses have two features most of the time.

Widespread in San Francisco

Double billing is firmly intrenched in the Greater San Francisco field, except for a few downtown houses, such as the Paramount, Loew's Warfield, Golden Gate, United Artists and Embassy. Neighborhood houses, almost without an exception, feature double bills. The St. Francis theatre is meeting success with a fixed policy of double features at 25 cents and roadshows at 50 cents to $1. The Embassy, formerly Warner's, has reopened, under a single feature policy. The Powell, formerly the Edison, has reopened with double bills.

Tampa Neighborhoods Use Duals

Double feature programs are being used quite extensively by the second run and neighborhood theatres of Tampa. Managers report that returns are very much better.

No Menace in Houston

The double bill policy has never been a menace in Houston, having been used consistently by only one third-run theatre of the Will Horwitz local chain. The Queen, small Publix theatre, recently re-opened with a double bill program, but this is not the usual policy.

Few Double Programs at Des Moines

In Des Moines it was reported that double features have never been introduced at any Iowa theatres with the exception of midnight prevues of coming attractions.

Portland Uses Doubles

There have been but few cases of double billing in the Portland (Ore.) first-run houses, though there is plenty of it in suburban and second runs. First runs are down to 15 cents at the Rialto and Fox Liberty. The Liberty every other week puts on two first-run features for 15 cents.

Wide Open in Milwaukee

Milwaukee exhibitors, who for a long time refused to countenance double features among the first-runs, have finally gone wide open with the Warner, Universal's Alhambra and Fox's Palace playing dual bills. The majority of the neighborhood houses are already playing two features. The practice has also become more general throughout the state, with the majority of theatres in Racine, Oshkosh, Beloit and Fond du Lac playing dual bills.

Philadelphia Using Doubles

Philadelphia theatres are increasingly using double bills. Approximately 40 theatres in the territory are steady dual adherents.

Pittsburgh Fans Favor Duals

Theatregoers in and about Pittsburgh welcome double bills at neighborhood theatres.

New York Ready to Act

Independent theatre owners in the New York territory, which includes northern New Jersey, are understood to be considering a ban on double features, on condition that the affiliated circuits do likewise. The probability of a shortage of features is understood to be the prompting factor.

Local exchange managers are preparing to go to their exhibitor clients with a proposition whereby all theatres would agree to raise or stabilize admissions and eliminate second pictures on all bills. The New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, headed by Charles L. O'Reilly and representing independent exhibitors in the Metropolitan zone, are actively participating in all the double bill discussions.

Zeidman Releasing First of Expeditionary Films

B. F. Zeidman, who is to produce independently a number of expeditionary pictures, will first release "Samarang" ("Out of the Deep") April 15. He is negotiating for release through World Wide.

"Samarang" was filmed on the Java coast in the Dutch East Indies and is a romance of pearl diving, the expedition having been away six months.

BILL ON RECEIVERSHIPS PASSES N. Y. SENATE

Henry K. Davis Named Referee For Paramount Publix; Fox West Coast Files Schedule; RKO Creditors Meet April 3

Following its passage in the New York State Senate on Tuesday, the McNaboe bill, which prohibits state banks or trust companies from acting as receivers or trustees in bankruptcy or equity, was sent to the assembly. Specifically, it was said, the measure was designed to curb the widespread practice in New York State of federal judges referring all receivership cases in their courts to Irving Trust Company.

Meanwhile, the receivership situation in the motion picture industry remained practically unchanged. Developments in Paramount, RKO and Fox Theatres follow.

H. K. Davis Named Referee

Henry K. Davis was appointed referee in bankruptcy for Paramount Publix, Inc., on Monday. Creditors will meet in Mr. Davis' office at 140 Nassau street, New York, on April 3 to elect a trustee in bankruptcy. Mr. Davis is also referee for Publix Enterprises, bankrupt subsidiary of Paramount Publix. Examination of officers of the subsidiary will take place March 27.

Pending election of trustees in bankruptcy for Paramount Publix, the present receivers, Adolph Zukor and Charles D. Hilles, will continue to operate the company.

Irving Trust Company, as trustee in bankruptcy for Publix Enterprises, applied to the referee for authority to employ Dan Michalove to assist the trustee in conducting and continuing the business of the estate of Publix Enterprises, which was granted on Wednesday.

Late last week strenuous efforts to block the voluntary Paramount bankruptcy, in favor of involuntary bankruptcy actions instituted by security holders not in accord with executives of the corporation, failed at a hearing before Judge Bondy in U. S. district court. The hearing was adjourned until late this week, at which time outside bankruptcy petitions will be argued.

During the proceedings, Saul Rogers, representing security holders, said that he objected to the present "socalled receivers" and that the bankruptcy petition was invalid because the attorneys who filed it failed to give 10 days notice.

Defending his appointment of Mr. Zukor and Mr. Hilles as co-receivers, Judge Bondy continued them as "agents of the court" instructed to conserve assets until a trustee is declared.

Liquidation to Take Year

The work of liquidating assets will take at least one year, it was indicated. Only creditors who file claims prior to the meeting April 3 will have a voice in the trustee election, although claims may be filed for six months following the beginning of the bankruptcy. The court will appoint a referee to handle the claims.

Many theatre landlords are said to be negotiating with Publix Enterprises, Inc., for rental readjustments. At present, lease modifications comprise the receivers' principal activity and considerable progress is being made, according to the receivers.

In Columbus, Ohio, William B. Bartels, who was named ancillary receiver for Paramount Publix and Paramount Distributing Corp., was reappointed Tuesday after having been deprived of his authority through annulment. Judge Benson Hough fixed bond at $20,000.

"The voluntary bankruptcy petition of Paramount Publix cannot affect Publix-Michigan Theatres Corp., in any way," N. H. Platt, general manager, said at Detroit this week. "This firm is not in receivership."

On Thursday an involuntary petition in bankruptcy was filed in Boston against Olympia Theatres, Inc., subsidiary of Paramount Publix, by three creditors, whose claims amounted to $1,750.

Fox West Coast Schedule

On Monday in Los Angeles, Fox West Coast filed its schedule of liabilities and assets listing Fox Film Corp., Chase National Bank and Wesco Corp. as major creditors. Others listed were the Bank of America, practically all the large distributing companies, and Adolph Ramish, Inc.

The circuit owes more than $5,000,000 to Chase, according to the schedule signed by Charles A. Buckley, vice-president. Wesco heads the list of creditors, with $11,094,774 in debts, and Fox Film Corp. claims $2,456,195. In addition, the schedule states, about $2,000,000 is owed to bondholders. Adolph Ramish, Inc., is listed for $608,750.

Assets of Fox West Coast were estimated at $6,790,978, which, according to the schedule, did not include property and certain theatre holdings the value of which was not determined.

Federal referee in bankruptcy, S. W. McNabb, is in charge until the case is passed on by U. S. District Judge James for final action.

On Friday, Fox West Coast Theatres, Inc., filed bankruptcy schedules in U. S. district Court, Los Angeles, listing secured claims at $3,575,193.90 with the amount of unsecured claims not determined. Debts due on open accounts were listed at $176,649 and negotiable stocks and bonds were valued at $6,524,163. Cash on hand in theatres was given at $8,875. The petition was filed by counsel for Charles Skouras and John Treanor, receivers. One clause in the petition stated that $6,752,148.26 in liabilities should be paid by other parties, but no explanation was made as to what other parties might be involved.

In Kansas City the date for filing bankruptcy schedules of Fox Midland and Fox Rocky Mountain Theatre companies has been extended by the federal court there to April 7, on request of the companies' attorneys. Specifications of assets and liabilities were due to be filed March 18, as required by law.

A concerted drive by all circuits to obtain cuts in union scales is under way in Kansas City. Fox is understood to be leading the movement. RKO and Publix have asked unions to accept a 50 per cent slash, during the present emergency at least, but the unions have flatly refused. They are accepting part payment of salaries with promissory notes for the balance. A general walkout of the Fox houses was scheduled late last week, but the receiver agreed to the notes.

RKO Creditors Meet April 3

Creditors of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp. will meet in the office of Oscar W. Ehrhorn, referee, April 3, in New York, to file claims.

In Wilmington, this week, Herman Zohbel was elected trustee of RKO Southern and RKO Western at a meeting of creditors before the U. S. referee in bankruptcy, Charles W. Cullen of Georgetown. Both corporations are in bankruptcy. In Dallas, RKO Southern closed all local offices Monday, all houses in the circuit reverting to landlords. Karl Hoblitzelle, owner of the Majestic theatres in Dallas, San Antonio and Houston, has been operating those houses since last Friday. The Capitol in Dallas, owned by I. Rude, may be leased either to Mr. Hoblitzelle or to Ray Stinnett, former lessee. RKO's Majestic and Hollywood in Fort Worth have been returned to their owners, although it is expected that Mr. Hoblitzelle, one time lessee of the Fort Worth Majestic, will not take over that house for his circuit.

Nineteen RKO theatres have been turned back to the original owners since Irving Trust Company was appointed receiver, H. McCausland said late last week. In the RKO, KAO and Orpheum circuits, 44 houses have been closed. Eighty-eight are now showing pictures exclusively and 25 are running vaudeville and pictures. In Chicago, the Orpheum circuit, in bankruptcy, is operating out of cash receipts, with the result that wages in many instances are down 50 per cent.

A hearing on an amended petition for appointment of an ancillary receiver for RKO Midwest and RKO Distributing Corp., scheduled for Tuesday before Federal Judge Robert R. Nevin in Cincinnati, was postponed until Monday, March 27.

THE CAMERAMAN

by Terry Ramsaye

(Editor of Motion Picture Herald)

In the library of Trinity College in Dublin reposes the most beautiful book in the world—The Book of Kells. It is a time-hallowed documentary memorial of artful craftsmanship. Skilled scribes, now so long asleep that no one knows their names, labored with a genius founded on a technique and tradition that too is lost among the old mysteries. But the world still knows and can see the glory of the pages that they wrought. World fame has come to those unknown scribes through the fame of their work. They are known, of course, only as the men who made The Book of Kells—the most beautiful book in the world.

Today there is such another guild of craftsmen, workers on the world's new living pages of the screen—the cameramen, scribes of a newer art. The old scribes worked with brush and quill, laying on rouge and gold and silver, pouring life and grace into the pages of black letters. These new scribes of the camera work with the magic pencils of light, gripped by lens and shutter, as they trace upon the speeding film, in the alchemy of photochemistry, the living stories of our world and stages of Now. The Book of Kells belongs to yesterday. The new honors of the new tradition belong to the Book of Today, the motion picture. The contribution is none the less that it is new.

Like those scribes of Kells, the cameramen, those writers of the pages of the screen, do not come to personal fame. And yet they can as a guild of craftsmen fairly lay claim upon large dominion in the traditions of the world of the motion picture. It was in fact a cameraman assistant who helped Edison bring motion to the picture, William Kennedy Laurie Dickson, who sits today spending the afternoon of his life on an island in the British Channel. It was another cameraman, Edwin S. Porter, who, years after, conceived the notion that motion pictures might tell stories and so gave us the photoplay.

These scribes who write in blackened silver on a negative have set down for you all the glamours, glories, excitements and thrills that the screen has brought. When the story goes to the end of the world, they go with it. The man who says it with words can hear about it and draw the picture with his fancy. But the cameraman has to be there when it happens—whether it is on a studio stage or anywhere across the continents, on the seas between, or in the air above. He has to be there when it happens.

The most significant tribute to the high standard of attainment among these scribes of the light-pencil is presented in the absence of tribute. Not so very many years ago it was a part of every critique of the motion picture to comment upon the photography. Whether it was good or bad was a question to be answered and commented upon by the critics. Today motion picture photography is so uniformly adequate and skillful that not one motion picture review in a thousand has anything to say of it. Good photography, superlatively good photography, is taken for granted—a commonplace of excellence.

It is not the mission or the proper function of the scribe to stand in the light between the reader and the page—but when again you thrill and respond to some triumph of the screen, remember there was a cameraman there when it happened.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

DEAR HERALD:

Decision that studio talent have agreed to take cuts in their wages for a limited time sounds like business. Those stars who refuse to take a cut should be reminded that this business survived before they came into it and it will continue to survive after they have gone out of it.

There's a notion among some people that acting is a God-given talent that has been bestowed only upon a certain select few. That notion is a lot of horseradish. There are thousands of men and women in this country who, if given the training and proper direction, could act as well as many of those with a foreign accent, and who would be glad to work for one-fourth the money that is being paid to them. When they wash the glamour and tinsel and hooey out of this business this industry will get somewhere.

We presume that Leo Meehan intends to picturize the Gene Stratton Porter stories. We hope he does and brings to the screen some more wholesome entertainment. We still remember "The Keeper of the Bees." We wish him every success.

Mr. Wid Gunning we met by invitation some years ago at the Fontenelle hotel in Omaha when we were herding the cows off the streets and acting as the official collecting agent for the producers at the Auditorium theatre here in our home town.

Wid measures 100 per cent both up and down and sidewise. He has had a life-long habit of telling the truth whenever occasion demanded. He pushes a wicked pencil and pounds a caustic typewriter, as is evidenced by his editorial bow under the caption, "Dirt on the Screen is Dynamite." We approve of that editorial and we approve of Wid, and we welcome him to the fold, and that ought to make everything all hunky dory.

It begins to look now like they were going to go to shooting one another again over in Europe. Should the war clouds begin to gather in this country we hope Congress will pass an act to conscript the money as well as men, and when they do that you will hear the millionaires go to yelling their heads off for peace. There is no argument for peace like reaching for the bank rolls of the millionaires. The Government would have to have a mighty long arm to find anything to conscript on us.

We were certainly pleased to read that page of letters from exhibitors in the March 4 issue of the HERALD.

August C. Berkholz of the West Bend theatre at West Bend, Wisconsin, gave us some constructive ideas on the subject of "Protection." August is right and his letter is worth reading. We know August personally and he's a swell fellow. Hello August, old socks, how are you?

Our old friend Chet Miller, manager of the Fox and other theatres at Cheyenne, Wyoming, advises exhibitors to pay no attention to reviews of pictures in fan magazines because they are not dependable. There are two of us Chet who hold to that view. You are one and you can guess who the other one is. Our guess is that the brush is full of 'em. Our experience is that a four star rating of a picture in New York is usually nothing-plus out in a country where people use their heads to think with.

Then comes our old college chum, Herman J. Brown of the New Majestic theatre at Nampa, Idaho, and gives us some very plain, sensible talk on salesmanship of motion pictures. We have had some very enlightening conversation with Herman and we regard him as an exhibitor who doesn't shoot at the moon. He keeps his sights trained right square on the mark. He speaks loudly for the independent producers as a means to combat monopoly. There is a lot in what Herman says.

Peter Rufo of the Warner theatre at Niles, Ohio, suggests that the HERALD publish a crossword puzzle of Hollywood each week. For the love of Mike, Pete, don't start that. This country has gone crazy over crossword puzzles now, and besides that, who could work a crossword puzzle of Hollywood? The producers have been working on that puzzle for years. That's what's the matter with 'em out there. Be reasonable Pete, be reasonable. The next thing we know you will want the HERALD to put on a radio crooner.

We hope to see at least a page of letters from exhibitors in each issue. We believe the HERALD would be glad to have your opinions on various matters, since you are one of the principal branches of the industry.

If you can't think of anything better to say, jump onto this colyum. We've got a hide like a rhino and we are not due to take a bath until June 27th. You know—

Some people take a bath each day
And some three times a week,
But we don't take ours, we're free to say,
Until our wrinkles squeak.

About every so often someone issues a mandate that pictures must be cleaned up, that all smut and filth and sex must be eliminated, but no one seems to have authority to enforce the mandate.

The time has come when the public is not buying theatre stock. Banks are not financing the industry as they once did. The money to carry on this business must now come from one source, and one source only, and that source is through the box offices of the country. To ignore that source is financial suicide. To strengthen it is to build for security and prosperity. Clean, wholesome pictures will do it.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Allied

CLEARING THE RANGE: Hoot Gibson, Sally Eilers—A very acceptable western. Played Feb. 26.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

A PARISIAN ROMANCE: Lew Cody, Marion Shilling—A very good entertaining picture. Stars and cast good. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Chesterfield

THRILL OF YOUTH: June Clyde, Matty Kemp—This is a poor brand of a picture that has neither action, drama, nor thrills. Supposed to show what the run-around kids do while Daddy is busy with his love affair. Actors much too good for this type of picture. Patrons sensed this one and stayed away. Played Mar. 9. Running time, 63 minutes.—William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Small town patronage.

Columbia

AIR HOSTESS: Evalyn Knapp, James Murray—This one drew extra good first night, then the banks closed the second day, and Saturday night was 75 per cent off normal. Good picture. Pleased the patrons.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

HELLO TROUBLE: Buck Jones—Another winner from Jones. Biz off on any picture. Played Feb. 22.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta. Small town patronage.

McKENNA OF THE MOUNTED: Buck Jones—Well made western, but too serious. No comedy relief. Played Mar. 4-5.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

NO MORE ORCHIDS: Carole Lombard—Here is a mighty fine little picture, that will please most any kind of theatre patron. It drew average business for us and had lots of good comment from patrons when leaving theatre. You can run this one on the nights that you show your best programs. Played March 3. Running time, 74 minutes.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

OBEY THE LAW: Leo Carrillo, Lois Wilson—This is not a big picture, but will give very good satisfaction. The idea is very good. It sets out to show that American citizenship is something to be proud of, and something not appreciated by the average American born citizen. It's just a program picture, but better than average. Drew fairly well for us. Played Feb. 28. Running time, 70 minutes.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

THAT'S MY BOY: Richard Cromwell, Dorothy Jordan—Very good football picture, which drew well and pleased. I haven't played a poor Columbia this season—and their prices are right. Played Feb. 9-10.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

THAT'S MY BOY: Richard Cromwell, Dorothy Jordan—Another fine little program picture from Columbia. Did not draw big business, but pleased 100 per cent. It's a new kind of college football picture, a fine story, good acting. Get behind it and do some business. Played March 7. Running time, 71 minutes.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

VIRTUE: Carole Lombard—Very good program picture. Weather was very bad when we ran it so I can't say what the drawing power is. Played Feb. 7-8.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

WHITE EAGLE: Buck Jones—Very good western but it did not draw. The western fans have no money for shows these days. Played Feb. 11.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

First National

CENTRAL PARK: Joan Blondell—A picture with a lot of action. Keeps the audience guessing as to what will happen next. Would make a good Friday-Saturday picture. Played Mar. 8-9. Running time, 55 minutes.—Alpha Lee Murphy, Ritz Theatre, Olney, Tex. Small town patronage.

THE CROONER: David Manners, Ann Dvorak—Some exhibitors pan this one but I would like to have one per month as good and same type. No draw because of banks closing, and the stars not known here, although no one could have played their part any better.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

EMPLOYES ENTRANCE: Warren William, Loretta Young—Very satisfactory picture. Lots of good comments—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

TWO SECONDS: Edward G. Robinson—Good entertainment but didn't quite draw average business.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

YOU SAID A MOUTHFUL: Joe E. Brown—This is a great comedy and gave 100 per cent satisfaction to all that saw it. Played Mar. 5-6.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

YOU SAID A MOUTHFUL: Joe E. Brown—Fine family picture, fast moving entertainment along the lines of all the wide mouthed comedian's offerings. Farina drew plenty of laughs and the two make a splendid team. Business not quite average due to local conditions and not to picture. This one should please anywhere. Played Mar. 3-4. Running time, 70 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

Fox

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Will add my voice to all the rest and say that this is one sweet picture for the exhibitor. No business on account of bank holiday. Played Mar. 8-9. L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Here's one star the fans have not forgotten during her absence from the screen and what a comeback she makes. The story unfortunately is not too convincing, but the Bow fans overlook that and the raves were all for this star, and the wonderful improvement in her appearance and acting. Business just fair due to conditions. Played Mar. 8-9. Running time, 88 minutes. —M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Drew wonderfully well and pleased. The story suits Clara's personality perfectly. Played Feb. 26-27.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

CONGORILLA: Taken by Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—Very good picture of its kind. I don't know what the drawing power is as the banks declared a holiday and so have the theatre patrons. Played Mar. 2-3.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

CONGORILLA: Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—Here is the best jungle picture ever made, barring none. This is the only picture of its kind that I ever played in this theatre that pleased everyone and one that nearly everyone did not think faked. I ran this one month after another of the same type and broke the house record for a year. Played March 3-4. Running time, 72 minutes.—W. L. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

DANGEROUSLY YOURS: Warner Baxter, Miriam Jordan—A passable program picture. Played Feb. 28-March 1.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

DANGEROUSLY YOURS: Warner Baxter—Good program picture but it did not draw well the second night. Played Feb. 21-22.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

DANGEROUSLY YOURS: Warner Baxter, Miriam Jordan—Good light entertainment, with Miss Jordan turning in one of her best performances to date. Warner Baxter fine in this, but this fine actor deserves better material than this and if he is to hold his place as a box office star he will have to have it. Played Feb. 26-27. Running time, 73 minutes.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

FACE IN THE SKY: Spencer Tracy, Marian Nixon, Stuart Erwin—Excellent. Clean, wholesome, entertaining and different. Get behind it; it's worth stepping on. Played March 2-3.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FACE IN THE SKY: Spencer Tracy, Marian Nixon—This was my last attempt. With my bank account frozen and not enough money coming in to keep things running, I had to quit. "Face in the Sky" is only a program picture, but is very entertaining. I doubt its drawing power. Played March 7-8.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

THE GOLDEN WEST: George O'Brien—I believe that this is the best Zane Grey western that I have ever seen. The production is made up very elaborate, as one seldom sees in a western. Fox made a big one when they made this picture and some of my patrons thought it better than "The Big Trail." Although this picture did not do as well as expected I account for this due to the bank holiday. Played March 10-11. Running time, 74 minutes.—W. L. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

THE GOLDEN WEST: George O'Brien—Excellent. Be sure to mention Zane Grey's name in advertising this. Many have read the book. This one drew very well considering conditions. Played February 16-17. —Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

HANDLE WITH CARE: James Dunn, Boots Mallory—At the time we booked this picture we did not realize what a splendid Friday-Saturday show it was. Do not believe the appearance of the effeminate person was impressive enough to have made the show undesirable for the little ones. However, quite a number of adults mentioned liking it. Played March 5-6.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

HOT PEPPER: Victor McLaglen, Edmund Lowe—Excellent for its kind. The weather was bad so it did not make any money for me, but it pleased practically all who saw it. All men like this type of entertainment and I heard no complaints from the ladies, although it is rather rough. Played Feb. 14-15.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tracy—Great comedy drama. Think it will please 100 per cent. Bank holiday, no business. Played March 11.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglen—This picture might do business and it might please in some spots, but here it fell flat and those that came to see it left feeling that they had wasted their time and money. In two nights the picture drew $22 over film rental. The Fox program this year has been a big disappointment to us. Not a box office picture in their program so far, and this one was the worst of the lot. Come on, Fox, give us some "State Fairs" on our present contract to make up for the poor ones. Played March 8-9. Running time, 65 minutes.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM: Marian Nixon, Ralph Bellamy—This picture was surely no drawing card for me. Did not pull film rental on first night and never took in a dime second night, so did not run, and as this is the first time that I have never run as advertised I began to believe my operator's saying that the picture would not draw flies if there was honey on the film. However, I personally thought the picture good, although not above the program type. Played March 5-6. Running time, 70 minutes.—W. L. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

ROBBER'S ROOST: George O'Brien, Maureen O'Sullivan—One of the best westerns we have ever run. Good story portrayed consistently, background good to look at, couple songs by cowboys that added much. O'Brien and Miss O'Sullivan excellent in their roles. Played March 4.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SECOND HAND WIFE: Sally Eilers—A lovely picture which drew and pleased. It is pretty to look at and should go well over Sunday. It will please the women patrons 100 per cent. Several told me that they couldn't wish to see a lovelier picture. Be sure to mention Kathleen Norris as the author. Played Feb. 12-13.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

SECOND HAND WIFE: Sally Eilers, Ralph Bellamy—This one will please and it drew fair business for us, but it's not a big picture, and you cannot promise too much and make good on your promise. I would call it a typical Fox picture, if you know what I mean. Played March 5-6. Running time, 64 minutes.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

SMOKE LIGHTNING: George O'Brien—A good, clever, entertaining picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Pleased swell, but did not draw because of bank holidays. Heaven help the poor exhibitors. They are on the firing line. Played March 5-6.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—Our customers always turn out for Will Rogers. Brought our Friday-Saturday business up. Played March 10-11.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

WILD GIRL: Charles Farrell, Joan Bennett—Full of action and pep, which seems in greatest demand by our Saturday night audiences. Played March 4.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York. Mixed patronage.

Majestic

THE CRUSADER: H. B. Warner, Evelyn Brent—Fair picture. Ned Sparks is the whole show. Otherwise an ordinary programmer. Sound rather poor. Acting at its best that could be done in this type of a picture. Played March 13-14. Running time, 65 minutes.—William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa.

HEARTS OF HUMANITY: Jean Hersholt, Jackie Searl—A mighty good picture. Acting and story good. If some of the big companies had this feature, it would be classed a special.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Mayfair

BEHIND STONE WALLS: Eddie Nugent, Ann Christie—Just so so. Might do on a double bill. Played Feb. 28.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MGM

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY: Jackie Cooper—One of the finest human interest pictures we have yet played. 100 per cent entertainment.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Thatre, Raymond, Alberta. Small town patronage.

FAITHLESS: Tallulah Bankhead, Robert Montgomery—Only fair entertainment. Business not much.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines—A fast moving comedy that will please the majority. Will bring laughs and thrills and that is what people want these days. Played March 9-10. Running time, 82 minutes.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Small town patronage.

FLESH: Wallace Beery, Karen Morley, Ricardo Cortez—A man's picture; ladies will not care for it. Beery is excellent in the part he portrays. Personally do not consider it good entertainment. There is also too much talking in German, also German brogue, for American audience. Too much wrestling. Played February 23-24.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FLESH: Wallace Beery—Very fine picture which suited the men perfectly. We ran it on Sunday and were not sorry. It has good drawing power due to Wallace Beery's wonderful acting. Played Feb. 19-20.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

KONGO: Walter Huston—Not the type of picture people will pay good money to see. No business at all. Barely got film rental.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

THE MASK OF FU MANCHU: Boris Karloff—Another horror type, with the horror stuff piled on so thick it becomes laughable. Boris Karloff sadly miscast and the part should have been played by Warner Oland, the Fu Manchu in the other pictures of this series. Leave it in the can and you won't have to apologize for another of Leo's lapses. Played March 11 (midnight show). Running time, 67 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

THE MASK OF FU MANCHU: Boris Karloff—I did not see this, but I do know that it did not please any too well. There were several walkouts on it. People are fed up on horror pictures. I fear that this one will make it hard to put "Son-Daughter" and "Bitter Tea of General Yen" over. Played Feb. 23-24.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES: Laurel and Hardy—This is what the small town wants. Stood them in the aisles second night. Good business first night. After first night showing I had a boy dress in a black suit I had made of thin material so he could see through it and not be seen by others. I padded his shoulders so they would come up with top of his head and put a sign on him that read, "I laughed my head off at Laurel and Hardy in 'Pack Up Your Troubles' last night, Paradise Cotter. Come laugh your's off tonight." He walked in all the business houses and through the streets of three towns. I am sure this drew me extra business, as it created lots of excitement and had quite a crowd following him. Played February 3-4.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES: Laurel and Hardy—Did a very small Friday-Saturday business. Don't know just why. The national banking situation may have thrown a scare into some, and again, there are few adults who care about sitting through more than two reels of these very splendid comedians. Played March 3-4.—B. G. Sigsbee, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES: Laurel and Hardy—Just one of their three reel comedies, dragged out to seven reels. The laughs are the gags used in all their other pictures, and the best scenes are those in which a mighty cute youngster appears. Even on a double bill, this failed to pull and business was far below average. Beginning of Lent did not help any, either. Played March 1-2. Running time, 70 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

PAYMENT DEFERRED: Charles Laughton—Defer playing this as long as you can and do your patrons and yourself a big favor. There's no excuse for making a picture of this type, and little reason to expect the public to find it entertaining picture fare. Leo, the roaring lion, must be getting old and lazy, to let this one get by. No pull and no wonder. Played March 4 (midnight show). Running time, 82 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

RED DUST: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow—Very good picture of the type. Gable does not seem to be much of a draw here. Business fair.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

THE SECRET OF MADAME BLANCHE: Irene Dunne—One of the sweetest pictures ever made. Well liked here. As usual Irene Dunne does some grand acting. All women, especially mothers, will enjoy this picture. It's a grand Sunday-Monday show. Exhibitors should exploit Irene Dunne's name, as she seems to be a box-office draw. Played February 26-27-28. Running time, 78 minutes.—Alpha Lee Murphy, Ritz Theatre, Olney, Tex. Small town patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—This is great entertainment. Did the best business in months. Why don't Metro make Norma Shearer stop that silly giggle. It seems to have turned people against her.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Norma Shearer—Without a doubt one of the finest of all pictures, but you cannot get them in. No money, but pleased 100 per cent. Played February 16. Running time, 100 minutes.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta, Can. Small town patronage.

WHAT! NO BEER? Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—Buster has made his exit since making this picture and Schnozzle should not have made his entrance. Durante don't click in the small town and we "nose" it. He's okay now and then for bits, but too much is too much. This did not go over at all. Played March 12-13. Running time, 66 minutes.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

Monarch

FORTY NINERS: Tom Tyler, Betty Mack—Fairly good story. Picture lacks action, the heart of all westerns. Tyler does not come up to standard as in Universal serial. Direction by J. P. McCarthy. I wonder if he heard the one about the Empty Bottle. Running time, 55 minutes.—William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Small town patronage.

Monogram

KLONDIKE: Lyle Talbot—Audience well pleased with this production. Played March 4.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich—Here is another fine picture from Paramount. Dietrich was extra good in this picture and pleased more patrons on my Sunday show than I have done in a long while. Played February 26-27. Running time, 85 minutes.—W. L. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich—No draw here at all in spite of favorable weather. Picture, however, is above the average and will please everyone except those that are looking for something a lot more sexy than this. Had a couple of our narrowest ministers present and they couldn't find much wrong with it. Sorry I advertised "not for children."—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

GUILTY AS HELL: Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen—Used on coldest night in 17 years, 30 below, and sold just 100 tickets. As it was Bargain Nite that didn't pay film rental. Good entertainment, so have set a return date.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT: Randolph Scott—Not the best Zane Grey story by any means but a picture that will please the majority. This picture took in more money than any western I ever ran and beat most feature receipts. Should do very well in any small town where Zane Grey stories are liked. Played February 17-18. Running time, 59 minutes.—W. L. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll, Cary Grant—Outdrew "Blonde Venus," which was played week before, but still very poor business. Weather conditions perfect for show business. Picture is supposed to be about a small town which has only four street cars. We would call that a city. I have never seen a "small town" picture. This show is very entertaining and should please anywhere.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

ISLAND OF LOST SOULS: Richard Arlen, Charles Laughton—Just plain terrible. There is absolutely no reason for such a production. Impossible story, and characters made up to look horrible. Many women held their hands over their eyes and the rest walked out. In times like these, people like to see lighter stories, with comedy and romance, and not have their minds depressed with such horror pictures. Played March 11-12.—C. W. Bennett, Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald—As I have heard other exhibitors say regarding this picture, so shall I say, "So long Chevalier." This was the bigest flop I have had in a long time. Some of the wisecracks got my patrons and the second night drew no one. Played February 19-20. Running time, 104 minutes.—W. L. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

MADAME BUTTERFLY: Sylvia Sidney, Cary Grant—Entertaining. Miss Sidney is wonderful, but it is slow, and the ending kills the picture. Makes the depression more depressing. Should have nothing but comedy dramas and musicals just now. If you like tragedies, it's good. Played March 7-8.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft, Constance Cummings—Booked this picture to entertain the Lions club and pleased everyone who saw it. Personally I think it one of the best shows that Paramount has ever turned out. Played March 1. Running time, 70 minutes.—W. L. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

THE PHANTOM PRESIDENT: George M. Cohan, Claudette Colbert, Jimmy Durante.—Although this production did not draw so well for us, the hilarious comedy pleased all comers. Played February 25.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York. Mixed patronage.

70,000 WITNESSES: Phillip Holmes, Dorothy Jordan, Charles Ruggles—Even the banking situation did not seriously affect the attendance, though it was some lower than the westerns bring. Ruggles, particularly, a favorite here. Played March 11.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York. Mixed patronage.

Paramount

SIGN OF THE CROSS: Fredric March, Elissa Landi—Excellent. As near 100 per cent. approval of your patrons as you will find. As in the past on pictures of this kind, it will bring out those that attend very seldom. Played March 5-6.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SIGN OF THE CROSS: Claudette Colbert, Fredric March, Charles Laughton—Played at start of moratorium and can't tell what the draw was, except it wasn't. Brought out an element of church goers who seldom come and they liked it. Did not appeal to younger element and they showed it by their absence. Fine direction by DeMille, leads fine, although personally thought Colbert miscast. Played March 22-23-24. Running time, 1 hr. 58 minutes.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

SIGN OF THE CROSS: Fredric March—A spectacular production, but not entertainment. Too long and too much brutality shown. Women and some men walked out on it. All this happened too long ago to interest the young folks of today. Played Mar. 5-6-7-8. Running time, 120 minutes.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Kay Francis—Typical Lubitsch production which will be appreciated by the better class of patrons. Comedy with a melodramatic twist, in the sophisticated manner, gorgeous sets and a beautiful musical background. This proved to be one of the most pleasing pieces of picture fare in many a moon. In our case, pleased nearly everyone. Business only average, due to bank moratorium no doubt. Played Mar. 6-7. Running time, 82 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

UNDER COVER MAN: George Raft, Nancy Carroll—Paramount has given us several surprise pictures this year and this is one of them. A mighty fine production, clean, plenty of action and enough humor to relieve the tense situations. Will hold the interest of your patrons and send them out pleased. Business O. K. considering the situation. Played Mar. 10-11. Running time, 72 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

THE VANISHING FRONTIER: Johnny Mack Brown, Evalyn Knapp—Should have used this on Bargain Nite. It didn't go over at all on my best nights. With a well known Western star this would have been a pretty good little Western, certainly nothing more.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

WILD HORSE MESA: Randolph Scott, Sally Blane—A fine Zane Grey Western from Paramount. They know how to make Westerns. Beautiful scenery, good acting, will give satisfaction in any town on Saturday. Played Mar. 4-5.—C. W. Bennett, Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

WILD HORSE MESA: Randolph Scott—Another of the so called Horse Operas which pleased our fans. Consistently better than the average. Played March 1.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta. Small town patronage.

RKO

THE BIG SHOT: Eddie Quillan, Maureen O'Sullivan—Here is a very good picture and will please nearly everyone. I did 10 per cent better than average on this, so believe this is the kind of entertainment that my patrons like. Played Feb. 24-25. Running time, 66 minutes.—W. L. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT: John Barrymore—Fine acting and that's all. Not suitable for the small town. Business little above average. Played Feb. 5-6.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE: Frank Buck—Guess I played this too old. Did not draw average weekend business even though a double-featured it with "Is My Face Red." Lots of the fans didn't care for this animal lecture. Am off these educational shows for life. —L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

HALF NAKED TRUTH: Lee Tracy—A fair pictrue that seems to miss. Something convincing lacking. Too much hooey. Will get a few laughs. Tracy good. Played Feb. 26-27-28. Running time, 79 minutes.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Small town patronage.

HELL'S HIGHWAY: Richard Dix—I stepped on this one hard but no use. Business was almost a new low record. Possibly bank holiday hurt some, although weather was ideal. Picture is very good and had quite a few favorable comments.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Wheeler and Woolsey—This one is very funny and seemed to please most every one.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Wheeler and Woolsey—Played in 10 below weather and drew a little more than anything I have played since. Will try a return date later on. Football scenes overdone. Do not think this as good as former Wheeler-Woolseys.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

NO OTHER WOMAN: Irene Dunne, Charles Bickford—We advertised this, stressing Irene Dunne and her work in "Back Street." One man walked out, but otherwise the comments were satisfactory. Played Feb. 26-27.—B. G. Sigsbee, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

RENEGADES OF THE WEST: Tom Keene—Had my house packed twice on this one, all due to Rosco Ates' popularity. This suttering comedian will get me nearly as much money as Marie Dressler. In fact he ranks second in drawing power.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

THE ROADHOUSE MURDER: Eric Linden, Dorothy Jordan—A lot better show than I expected. Comments were mostly favorable and drew above average on Bargain Nite. Would rate this a little better than fair.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

THIRTEEN WOMEN: Irene Dunne—Was very good mystery. Much better than the average, although they did kill all the women in Hollywood. Myrna Loy exceptionally good in part. Doubt if anyone could have played the part as good.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

THIRTEEN WOMEN: Irene Dunne—If this is entertainment, then I don't know what the word means. Never should have been made. Played Mar. 1-2. Running time, 60 minutes.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Small town patronage.

WHAT PRICE HOLLYWOOD: Constance Bennett—Very good entertainment. Gave satisfaction to the younger class of patrons.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

United Artists

CYNARA: Kay Francis: Some wonderful acting in this picture, and it might go over in some places, but was a complete flop for us. "Cynara" doesn't seem to mean anything to the public. Played Mar. 12-13-14. Running time, 80 minutes.—Alpha Lee Murphy, Ritz Theatre, Olney, Tex. Small town patronage.

Universal

AFRAID TO TALK: Eric Linden, Sidney Fox—Not even a good program picture. Had more complaints on this than anything we have played this season. Had we had more patrons, suppose we would have had just that many more squawks. Double billed. It failed to pull or satisfy. Business far below average. First days of Lent may have held this down. Played Mar. 1-2. Running time, 77 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

AFRAID TO TALK: Sidney Fox, Eric Linden—Carl, Jr., please do not make any more pictures like this one. Gangster pictures of this type are as dead as last year's bird nests; this one did not draw and did not please. And it is not good entertainment. It might get by on a cheap admission or double program. Played March 10. Running time, 76 minutes.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne, John Boles—Pleased 100 per cent and drew well. I can only say what all other exhibitors have said—it is one of the most beautiful pictures I have ever run. Played Feb. 28-Mar. 1.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

HIDDEN GOLD: Tom Mix—A splendid action picture. There is only one Tom Mix in this picture game and he makes good entertainment out of some thin stories.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

THE MUMMY: Boris Karloff—Run as midnight show and made a good one. It is in the "horror" class, and it is as good as any in the past. Holds interest from beginning to end. Played March 4.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THE MUMMY: Boris Karloff, Zita Johann—Usual crowd. There are a few people that like this sort of film, but as a general rule they are not so popular out here. Played Feb. 28-Mar. 1-2.—B. G. Sigsbee, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

THE MUMMY: Boris Karloff—In three days this picture did almost exactly what "Frankenstein" did in one day. There is no denying that Karloff is a great actor, but the public is fed up on horror type pictures, and it's time for Universal to drop Karloff or get him some stories of the Lon Chaney type. This one pleased those who like to be shocked and disgusted those who hate to be shocked. It will be up to you to decide what you want to do with "The Mummy." Played Mar. 10-11. Running time, 78 minutes.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

THE MUMMY: Boris Karloff, Zita Johann—A good picture of the horror type. Those that like this kind of entertainment were well pleased. Played Feb. 26-27.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MY PAL, THE KING: Tom Mix—Western fans and others were alike pleased with this talkie. Mix certainly can put it over in grand style. Played Feb. 18.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York. Mixed patronage.

NAGANA: Tala Birell—No one seemed to know what this was all about, but the ones who saw it liked the picture. Played March 7-8-9.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres—A good picture spoiled by a poor print. Played Mar. 7-8.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ONCE IN A LIFETIME: Plenty of stars to make a good picture. Do not let Uncle Carl fool you on this one. It might be hot stuff in New York or Hollywood, but it is a pain in the neck to country show goers. And once in a lifetime is all that I want to see a picture like this one. The only break we got was that it rained all day and only a few were disappointed by this supposed-to-be funny show. The one good spot in the picture was the fine acting of Aline MacMahon. That girl is some actress. Played Mar. 14. Running time, 90 minutes.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart—We ran this show for the benefit of the local relief committee. The Scouts got out and sold tickets which resulted in unusually large crowds both nights but everyone, especially the men, seemed to enjoy the picture. Played Feb. 24-25.—B. G. Sigsbee, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy—This is a knockout of a picture. Lee Tracy wisecracks his way through everything. Everybody got a laugh out of this one. In advertising, exhibitor should stress the fact that this is a comedy of war, and not a real war picture. Played Mar. 10-11. Running time, 75 minutes.—Alpha Lee Murphy, Ritz Theatre, Olney, Tex. Small town patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville—Here is a picture that patrons seemed to enjoy. It starts off with a bang. Lots of laughs in the first half, then tames down and no more real funny situations. Instead of building up as it progressed with a bang up ending, it was just the opposite. Played Feb. 26-27.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

average. They put some real actors in these that remind us old timers of the old silents Bill Hart and Tom Mix westerns made when these two were just young fellows. This boy John Wayne appeals to western fans and he has a horse that makes the kids forget about the famous Tony. Played Feb. 25. Running time, 60 minutes.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

THE BIG STAMPEDE: John Wayne—A splendid western feature. Better than average. Played Feb. 25.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

JEWEL ROBBERY: Kay Francis, William Powell —Played this one quite old, and from comments of what few that saw it, it is not regrettable that biz was off. Not much to it, but would work O. K. on a double bill. Played Feb. 27.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta. Small town patronage.

SO BIG: Barbara Stanwyck—Played this picture late but mighty fine production, and it follows the book very closely. It will be well to play this even though it is old. Running time, 88 minutes.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta. Small town patronage.

World Wide

LENA RIVERS: Charlotte Henry—A simple little story well produced, making perfect entertainment. A refreshing change from the murder-horror-infernal triangle theme of most current emanations from Hollywood. Played Mar. 9-10.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

BLUE OF THE NIGHT: Bing Crosby—Recommend this one to please most critical audience. Running time, 20 minutes.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

DINAH: Mills Brothers—The best cartoon we have run for ages. Clever and tuneful, but the patrons were too interested in hearing the Mills Brothers sing, to join in the chorus with the bouncing ball. Running time, 7 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

DON'T PLAY BRIDGE WITH YOUR WIFE: Lots of laughs and bridge fans will get a big wallop out of this one. Running time, 18 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

HAWAIIAN FANTASY: Vincent Lopez and Orchestra—Beautiful scenic shots are the chief interest in this one. Music O. K., but nothing to cause your patrons to rave over. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. General patronage.

VENICE VAMP: Aesops Fables—Speaking of shorts, lamp this one. Better still, "ear" it for it's far out of the ordinary. MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

UTOPIA!

WE sometimes sit back and wonder just what some managers look forward to in their advanced years. Do they expect to go on running theatres at a salary until old age sneaks up and takes a crack at them? Do they expect theatre-owners to keep them working while up-and-coming youngsters are available and probably capable of injecting pep—imaginary or otherwise—into theatres?

But we know the right answer; and what's more, we have plenty of real proof to back it up. Managers should be counting the years, the months or the days until the time they can acquire a theatre for themselves. That's the only logical or sensible outlook in life for every man in the business.

Many times I have stressed to showmen the thought that I would sooner see most of them working their fingers to the bone for themselves rather than plugging away endlessly for others. Not that everyone will eventually be a theatre owner or exhibitor. We know that there are some men better fit to serve others than themselves. And we also know that the circuit, large and small, must have showmen to run their houses.

Among the "smart" boys to join the rapidly growing list of independent exhibitors are: Will J. Glaser, Paramount Theatre, Faribault, Minn.; Everett Dilley, Grand Theatre, Northfield, Minn.; Elmer Nelson, State Theatre, Waseca, Minn.; Thomas di Lorenzo, Glen Theatre, Glen Cove, N. Y. And, about seventeen others who will be mentioned in the near future but whose deals are not entirely complete, although they are already operating their newly acquired possessions.

Our hats are off to these and every other showman smart and capable enough to grab themselves a theatre and stop slaving for others. If only a thousand more would take the same step it would be the nearest approach to prosperity this business could ever hope for. It would mean that every theatre operated by a real showman who came up in the business from the bottom would be a theatre operated along lines of real showmanship. They would give their respective communities a brand of theatre operating that had probably never before been experienced. It would encourage patronage, increase film revenue for producr and distributor and help put showbusiness back on its feet.

Instead of poo-pooing the idea, those responsible in a large measure for the destinies of our business should more than encourage the movement of showmen toward the goal of independence as exhibitors. As for the managers themselves, if they are not forming some concrete ideas about their own futures we feel mighty sorry for them. They ought to stop and ask themselves this question: "Where am I heading for?"

ARE YOUR PATRONS FED UP with the same old program which you mail week in and week out for fifty-two weeks a year? Have you ever given a thought to the tremendous possibilities of the "class" residents of your community and the chance of making them regular patrons of the theatre? Do you crave an idea for creating new interest in the amusement center you are "supposed" to be operating? Well, here it is:

Milton Chamberlain, managing director of Brecher's Plaza Theatre in New York City, and conceded to be the "Ritz" playhouse for the swanky Park Avenoo high-hats, just completed one of the best pieces of institutional literature ever made up for any theatre.

Titled: "An Intimate Chat . . . On . . . An Intimate Playhouse . . .", Chamberlain has set forth the history of the "Plaza" dating back to the days when it was first located on Lexington Avenue; extolling its virtues, its atmosphere, its warm welcome, its service, its admission scale, its air-conditioning plant, and, everything one can think about in connection with a theatre, except the pictures it plays, and that angle is covered only in a general way.

Yes indeed, Milt has done himself and his theatre proud with a perfect booklet and we would venture the thought that several thousand other houses could make use of this same idea for a special mailing piece and find it mighty valuable. Want a tip? Drop a line to Chamberlain care of the Plaza at 58th Street and Madison Ave., in New York and ask him for a copy of the booklet. You'll agree, it's a swell piece of work.

SOUTHERN showmen will have to struggle through this winter without being annoyed by our dropping in on them . . . that Florida jaunt is more or less definitely off due to a banged-up knee which makes long-distance driving a punishment instead of a pleasure . . . so . . . we'll have to keep those red flannels at work and put the bathing suit back in moth-balls until next winter rolls around. ED HART NOW READE REPRESENTATIVE IN JERSEY TERRITORY

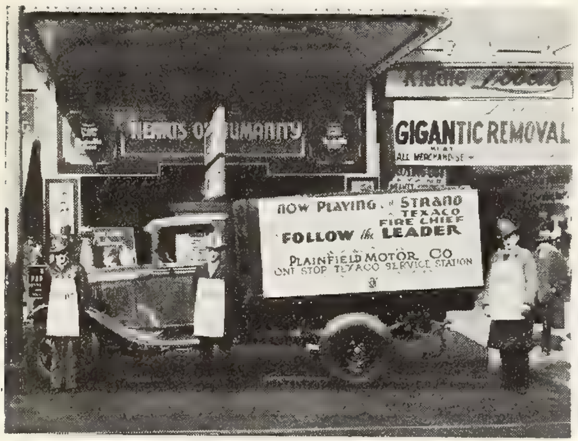
Our old friend Ed Hart, formerly of Utica, N. Y., and points east, is again hitting his usual stride over in Plainfield, N. J., since Publix turned its three houses in that city back to the Walter Reade Circuit. Hart, former manager of the Oxford Theatre, has been appointed Reade representative for the Oxford, Strand and Paramount.



Part of Hart's Auto Ballyhoo parade.

Among recent exploitation activities engineered by Hart were stunts on "Follow the Leader," a plug for vaudeville and a novel ballyhoo. On "Leader" he not only arranged a merchants' street parade of passenger autos and trucks bannered with tie-up copy, but obtained a lot of publicity by stenciling signs on the downtown sidewalks early one morning prior to playdate. It didn't go so well with the police department and the signs were ordered removed. However, Ed always has a way of conniving with police officials and the whole gag sounds to us like a frameup, particularly when confronted with a photo showing a man with a theatre sign draped around his neck, mop in hand and in the act of cleaning off the painted portion of a sidewalk. The accompanying photo shows one of the parade trucks parked in front of the theatre.

Learning that two Hollywood stars had obtained a lot of publicity by adopting male attire, Ed sold a local girl the idea of giving Plainfield an eyeful of how a good looking girl shapes-up in trousers. She created a mild sensation when strolling around town and received an ovation from the audience at the Paramount prior to and after doing an imitation of a Pat Rooney number. The newspaper played up a deep, two-column photo with caption.

When it was decided to resume vaudeville at the Oxford, Hart plugged the event with a street bally of a man and trained bear. The stunt gained a lot of attention while the trainer and animal worked the act and a boy followed with a big sign announcing return of vaudeville.

In line with his usual policy, we also note that Ed has been working hand and glove with the newspaper boys. In connection with a subscription drive made by one, front page mention was given to an offer of guest tickets to the Paramount and Oxford to those who signed up for the paper.

We're mighty glad to know that Ed Hart is getting along so nicely over in Plainfield and maybe one reason for this is because he's back in old stamping grounds. Several years ago he located there under Proctor.

SILVERWATCH STILL USING VARIETY OF SHOW-SELLING GAGS

We note that our good friend, Max Silverwatch, manager of the Strand Theatre, Waverly, Mass., and inventor of all sorts of show-selling novelties, has, as usual, been employing a variety of heralds and other stunts to boost patronage.

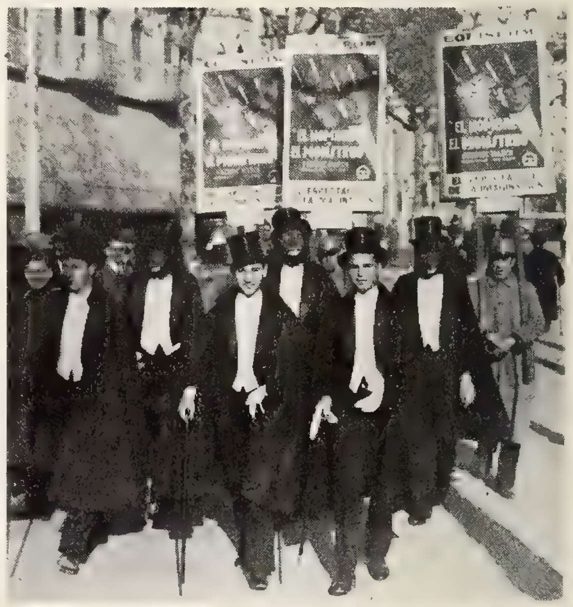
To get the first chapter of a serial off to a good start he resorted to the numbered herald gag, concerning which all readers are undoubtedly familiar with by this time. Distribution of 1,000 of these brought the kids flocking around the theatre and about 25 free admissions were handed out.

It was Friday, the thirteenth, when "Fugitive from a Chain Gang" made its appearance at the Strand, so Max issued a herald headed with those ominous words, explaining that the day might be unlucky for some folk, but that it would be a lucky day for theatregoers of Waverly and Belmont on account of marking the first showing of the picture. Distribution of 2,000 of these heralds proved very effective, as did a jig-saw puzzle gag of Muni's head placed in the paper at no cost except 20 passes. This one obtained a house-to-house circulation of 5,000.

Other recent exploitation included distribution of 2,000 novelty theatre tickets on "Smilin' Through," which excited considerable word-of-mouth advertising, and the mailing of 500 "smart" announcement cards to a selected list on "Successful Calamity," the George Arliss film. A very satisfactory response was obtained from the town's "400."

We certainly feel by this time that we owe Max some novelty heralds from other sources, so if the rest of the gang will come through we'll heed his request to send him an assortment. It's a foregone conclusion that he'll repay the act with some more of his own invention.

OLD SPANISH CUSTOM!



Just to prove to all of us that outdoor ballyhoo is still effectively used in a number of foreign countries, Albert Deane, manager of advertising and service in Paramount's foreign department, sent the Club the above photo of a stunt employed at the Coliseum Theatre, Barcelona, Spain, to exploit "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde." Yes, it's still an old Spanish custom, says Deane. The picture was dubbed into Spanish and shown in both dubbed and superimposed versions, each twice a day.

WHAT! NO EASTER EGG HUNT?

Good Will Plus Added Revenue
Available to Smart Showmen
Who Put Real Effort Into Ideas!

ABOUT the first thought that pops up in mind after Lent gets under way is Easter. Like every other season of the year, Easter holds its own peculiar fascination for the showman who has a keen desire to capitalize on each and every event, holiday and celebration with his business eye sharply focused on the bank roll. Easter offers many advantageous slants that will help keep that b. r. fat and healthy and we are always delighted to squat ourselves down before the trusty typewriter and talk about several timely gags that fit the season like a glove reflecting, at the same time, much activity to keep your theatre before the public and likewise keep the theatre's receipts up to the pressure made necessary by the survival of the fittest. Maybe the Irish had a better name for it, but in any language they must keep coming to the theatre and with Easter we can swing several good old standby ideas into force and make the getting a wee bit easier.

Easter Egg Hunt

Offers one of the greatest possibilities for directing attention to your theatre and getting you heaps of free publicity and good will. The best way to discuss one of these Hunts would be to tell how an aggressive showman put his over last year. Then you can either fashion your own along the same lines or revamp it to suit your local situation.

Manager Larson of the Fox Theatre in Boise, Idaho, tied up his Easter Egg Hunt with the Mickey Mouse Club of his theatre and raised so much talk around the town that grown-ups as well as kids entered into the spirit of the occasion. The turn-out was nothing short of phenomenal and it was the talk of the town for weeks after.

He started off by building up interest via a clever publicity campaign and long before the Hunt actually took place he had the kids all on edge awaiting the start. Instructions were clear-cut and easily understood by all. The kiddies were instructed to meet on two streets which the police were to rope off for their benefit. The time specified was 9:30 in the morning. Ample provision had been made with the police to guard the youngsters and keep traffic off those streets. At 10 o'clock they formed into a parade and, headed by two motorcycle cops and a band, they marched to a large park. Here they were divided into groups and the hunt started.

Free Eggs For All!

As an inducement to those who would not be among the prize winners to find any of the hidden eggs, every kiddie was informed that they would receive a large decorated candy Easter egg free. Which was a good slant because the number of kids hunting numbered almost a thousand, while there could only be about a hundred winners. Prizes for the Hunt included many valuable items and were well worth the effort and work, but the kids could see no labor attached to such fun and went into it with a will to find those hidden colored eggs.

The cooperation of the local park, education and recreational authorities had been enlisted with the result that the placing of the eggs was carefully arranged and spotted so as to make the hunt both interesting as well as difficult only to the extent of not letting them find them too easily. No risks were taken and no eggs were hidden where climbing or danger were involved. This is a point often overlooked by the manager when arranging his hunt. Thinking that the harder it is to find the more fun there will be, he often permits them to be placed in trees or some other place where the kids must take chances. One egg found hidden in such a spot means that most of the kids will start climbing every tree and shack they see.

A Three-Cornered Deal!

Larson was not the only manager who cashed in on a big Easter Egg Hunt. Our records also show that many others took advantage and engineered these Hunts in great style. The theatre to sponsor it and grab the goodwill, the newspaper to publicize it and create the interest, and the ice cream store to furnish the Easter eggs and other candy for prizes.

CHILDREN MEET AT THEATRE FOR EASTER EGG HUNT

Cash, theatre tickets, Coca Colas, Eskimo pies and various other things will be the awards for the kiddies in the big Easter Egg hunt Saturday morning sponsored by the Indiana theatre and the Democrat.

Children from 5 to 14 years old are eligible to participate in the hunt. They will assemble at the Indiana theatre at 9:30 o'clock Saturday morning and will be taken from there to the place of the big event.

The egg hunt is being planned under the condition that the weather is favorable. In case of rain it will be necessary to call the hunt off.

The high school band has been secured to lead the parade.

Publicity Secured by C. I. Curson Last Year

You will probably be surprised, if this is your first venture into the Easter Egg Hunt Gag, how the grown-ups go for this sort of stuff. In one town we visited a few years ago over three hundred men and women were noticeable on the outskirts of the crowd of kids assembled for the Hunt. And they went along with the youngsters, maybe their own, who knows, and suggested places for them to look for the hidden eggs. While this may not sound fair to the other kids it is an angle you can't avoid when you have several thousand kiddies to handle.

Kids Furnished Eggs!

In Stockton, Cal., Manager Turner of the Fox California Theatre reaped a harvest of publicity and goodwill via the same kind of a hunt. His was staged on the day before Easter Sunday and prior to this day a special matinee was put over for the purpose of building up interest and getting the eggs for the hunt. He charged each kid one hard-boiled egg as admission to the special matinee. These eggs were colored and used for the hunt. Special emphasis was placed on the "hard boiled" angle so as to avoid the kids flocking to the theatre with raw eggs and messing up the house.

Prizes for this hunt included everything imaginable for kids, not forgetting live rabbits, chocolate eggs, ice cream and admission tickets to the theatre. Special prizes included roller skates, dolls and other worth-while toys. Every inducement was offered to get the kids in the hunt and make it interesting. Thousands of eggs were placed in "nests" and were hidden in all sorts of places, and because of the large number of youngsters taking part they were divided into two sections and the eggs hidden in two separate places. Public parks and playgrounds, municipal bath houses, etc., were utilized for the purpose. Where a theatre is located too far from parks, etc., they must work it out along lines that will fit their immediate situation.

Easter Stage Revue!

While there are many angles of approach to the Revue it will be found that the final plan must be worked out strictly according to local conditions rather than along any set line. The local dancing school has a great bearing on the campaign; the various types of Revues, from straight entertainment, to a Kiddie Style Show in which can be worked countless merchants. The Fox Alcazar, on the Coast, handled it successfully last year with their own dancing instructor.

The tie-up involved the local newspaper, the theatre and the dancing school operated in conjunction with the theatre under the direction of a local dancing teacher with a wide reputation. She gladly volunteered her services because it gave her own school a chance to enroll the more advanced pupils. Remember that slant when you start to work on the organization of your own dancing school at the theatre.

Coloring Easter eggs right in the lobby of your theatre is another angle to create interest. Prior to the hiding of the eggs for one of the Hunts, advertise that special selected children will color the blank number of eggs for the hunt in the lobby of your theatre. Fix up a long table with the necessary paraphernalia and let the customers watch them as they go through the lobby or come in from the street out of curiosity.

Curson's Campaign!

Another smart showman who capitalized 100 per cent on the Easter Egg Hunt angle and made it count for big b. o. grosses was C. I. Curson of the Indiana Theatre in Washington, Ind. Curson secured the hearty cooperation of the local newspaper and as a result was able to publicize the event to such proportions that literally every youngster in the town and environs flocked to the Hunt and also to the box office for one of the greatest turn-overs the Indiana Theatre has ever had from the kids of that community.

The amount of public-interest gained will surely be appreciated by every other showman who values such attention-getting slants. We show on the preceding page a layout of the newspaper publicity in connection with this gag and on this page a photo of the mob of lads assembled for the Hunt. Just a glance at the small portion of the free space which Curson grabbed off for his theatre will more than gain your respect for his achievement.

Other photos, which lack of space prohibits our using, showed the several thousand kids being held in check by policemen until the signal to start the hunt was sounded. Then we can only ask you to call upon your imagination for the picture of those many youngsters going through nearby fields with a fine-tooth comb to find those prize-winning eggs.

Shepherd Put It Over, Too!

You no doubt recalled the swell Easter Egg Hunt engineered so successfully by Sonny Shepherd at the Biltmore Theatre in Miami, Fla., last year and which we were privileged to personally witness. He, too, brought together almost a thousand kids and attracted no end of grown-ups who have developed quite a respect for anything Sonny starts with that live-wire Mickey Mouse Club of his.

You need not want for Easter gags, either along the lines of Hunts or other types. Merely file away your copy of the HERALD each week and then keep the index sheets handy. You'll have everything you want.

A Word of Caution!

At this point a word of caution is essential. DON'T attempt to stage a hunt in your theatre. The last manager who tried that found himself with about eight hundred dollars worth of repairs. Those kids literally ripped the theatre apart to find eggs. And where they didn't go hunting is nobody's business. Even seats were torn open in the frenzy to find the eggs. Kids are not going to stop to reason over such things. All they know is that if they find the lucky eggs they cash in with sweet prizes and are the envy of all their playmates. That's enough for them. Off they go and Lord help the theatre while that hunt is on.

Here's the kids waiting for the word "Go!"

Stick to the public playgrounds and parks and you'll get far more benefit from it. The adults will come along to watch, the police will protect you and the school authorities will be glad to send a flock of teachers along to help keep order.

We've only touched on the Easter Hunt briefly. Maybe too briefly, but after all the important thing is the idea itself. Any smart showman should be able to take that idea and work it out to best suit his own town and theatre. Just get behind the idea and make a big thing out of it.

Schools Are Closed!

Don't forget that schools are closed for Easter Week and programs ought to be framed to appeal to them as well as the adult trade. Book appropriate pictures and keep anything suggestive off your screen for that week. There are enough good pictures available to do so.

PERHAPS A RABBIT MATINEE, TOO!

Last year a mid-west showman concentrated on a Rabbit Matinee and found that it meant many extra dollars to his b. o. Other showmen may decide to direct their efforts to this type of a stunt in place of the Easter Egg Hunt, so we are dropping a few lines on how it was handled.

In advance a large cut-out rabbit holding a basket of Easter eggs was on an ornamental trellis above his box office. Copy advertised that the Rabbit matinee would take place the following Saturday at 4 P. M.

A cage on the sidewalk, properly protected, containing over fifty live rabbits attracted no end of attention and had a crowd around it for practically the entire day. This was used for four days before the special matinee. All the rabbits were given away from the stage of the theatre.

To publicize the stunt he had about five thousand throwaways printed and distributed in all the schools. By arrangement these cards were handed out right in the classroom by the teacher who also made a personal announcement about the matinee.

Through a local tie-up he gave each kiddie a candy Easter egg as they entered the theatre. This sort of eased the feelings of the kids who were not lucky enough to win one of the live rabbits.

In some communities it may be possible to promote the rabbits, but even if you must buy them you will find the cost is not too big. Just give this sort of a stunt the right help in advertising, directing your chief fire at the children. They will turn out to the tune of about two hundred extra dollars on the day's receipts. Worth it? You answer the question yourself.

CARL NIESSE STAGED BATHING GIRL REVUE DURING ZERO WEATHER

Why wait until it's a hundred in the shade to pull a bathing beauty contest when one of these affairs can be put over during 20-below zero weather? Carl Niesse, manager, and Burl Darnell, P. A., of the Midwesco Fond du Lac Theatre did this very thing and boosted the gate $300 over average for the night.

Except for the extremely cold weather there wasn't anything unorthodox in the campaign. The merchants all furnished their own models and purchased $7 worth of tickets before the revue was even staged, thus assuring considerable cash revenue in advance. The theatre's end of the deal included silk streamers imprinted with names of "Miss So-and-So" and merchant, special trailer, lobby display and services of an organist. The winner was not only acclaimed the city's most popular girl but went home with a shiny $25 coin in her handbag. A local photographer contributed a display of the girls' photographs for spotting in downtown windows, all slippers worn by contestants were supplied gratis by a local shoe dealer and professional make-ups were given free to the girls by a local representative of a national concern.

So what do you say? The event turned out so well for Carl Niesse that he is planning another one to bolster up the dull days during Lent. Maybe it was the actual novelty of presenting a bathing girl revue in mid-winter that carried the appeal. Next we'll be hearing about an ice cream festival from some of the Club Eskimos up in the Arctic. Let's hear some more, Carl.

Craite's Post Card!

I. J. Craite manages the Fort Theatre out in Fort Atkinson, Wis. When campaigning "State Fair" he circulated all farmers with a post card that carried a photo of Will Rogers standing beside "Blue Boy," a prize winning hog. Included in the copy on card was the line: "All Roads Lead to The (Fair Grounds) Fort Theatre." Rural patronage during run of picture was heavy.

Henger's Shot-Gun Bally!

The shot-gun marriage idea appealed to George Henger, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla., as an appropriate gag to ballyhoo "They Just Had to Get Married," so he arranged to have a truck trailer carry around a make-believe bride and groom, with "father" standing in one corner with a shot-gun trained on the couple. The bally attracted plenty of attention.

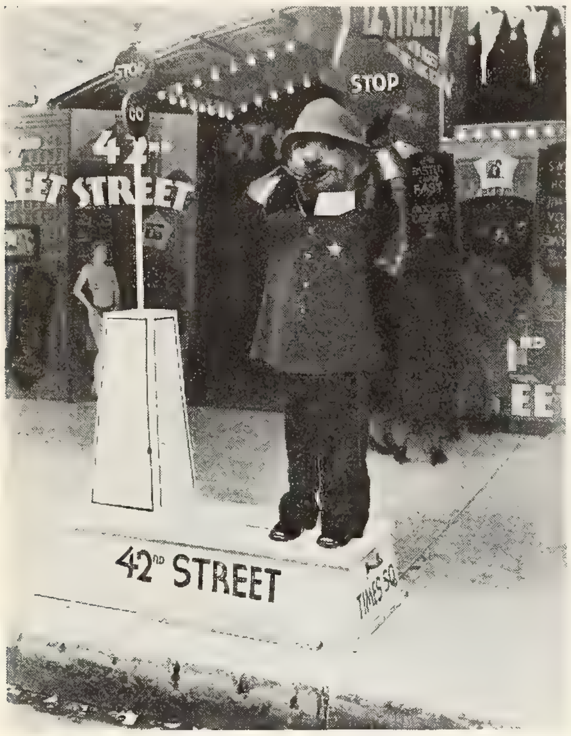
HOWARD WAUGH DID GOOD WORK ON HIS "42ND ST." CAMPAIGN

Sensing that the picture possessed unusual exploitation possibilities, Howard Waugh, manager of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., started well in advance to give "42nd Street" a long, steady build-up.

Included in his campaign were many advance stories in all news mediums; wide coverage in city and county with one, two and three-sheets; special screenings for newspapermen; plugs by several popular hotel and restaurant orchestras; radio broadcasts; serialization of story in papers; jigsaw puzzle exploitation; a most unique, animated lobby and front display, and many other publicity and exploitation gags.



The accompanying photo will convey but a small idea of the eye-arresting front and lobby designed by Waugh and his staff. We note on the campaign sheet that this has been described in detail in another home office communication but, unfortunately, same is not available at this writing. The shot we have at hand shows an animated "cop" supposedly stationed at 42nd Street and Times Square. We gather the dummy was geared to go through regulation motions and blow his whistle from time to time. This gadget was placed well out in front near the curb, while back under the deep marquee and on either side of entrance other animated figures of scantily clad chorines also shook torsos with the aid of mechanism rigged by Howard and his crew. We hear this display stopped 'em for a block.

ROSENBERG PLUGGED CAGNEY'S RETURN TO SCREEN ON LARGE AD

To plug the return of James Cagney to the screen, Jack Rosenberg, manager of the New Spreckles Theatre, San Diego, Calif., arranged for insertion of a newspaper ad 15 inches deep by 3-columns wide which featured art work from the picture, a line drawing of a speeding car and copy comparing Cagney's new vehicle to the latest creation from Detroit auto factories. A box in the lower portion of the ad was headed: "10 Weeks of Knockout Attractions" and listed forthcoming product.

AL WEISS DID GOOD WORK BEFORE GOING BACK TO SOUTHLAND

Before heeding the call of the Southland again, Al Weiss, then in charge of the Capitol Theatre, Springfield, Mass., hit his customary pace in the handling of campaigns on several pictures.

Remember the old gag of filling a jar with pennies and using same for a window display to test the mathematical skill of passersby? Instead of using pennies, Al used a variety of coins ranging up to silver dollars to exploit "Silver Dollar" and added extra interest to the gag by having a guard with gun stationed at the side of the large glass bowl. About 2,500 answers to how many silver dollars the bowl contained were received.

One of the first to show "Kid from Spain" at popular prices, Weiss conducted quite a pretentious newspaper campaign in and around Springfield, posted a lot of paper, used dash cards on street cars and obtained eight window displays based on records and music from the picture. In conjunction with a special display of stills, records were played in the lobby one week prior to opening and proved an excellent means of attracting attention to the coming show. Records were also given to the local radio station and were good for 30 free radio plugs one week in advance, to say nothing of a 15-minute program.

Window tie-ups were also made on the Cantor Game and Book; several lingerie displays were obtained by tie-ups with other stores; distribution made of 10,000 roto heralds cost-free, since the back page was sold to an advertiser, and other tie-ups effected on standard brands.

As the result of his campaign Weiss did business on a par with "Whoopee," which played over two years ago under much more favorable trade conditions. Al is now back at his old stamping grounds in Miami and holding forth as manager of the well known Olympia Theatre. Without doubt he is hitting his old stride and we'll soon be hearing whether the annual winter influx of visitors to the famous resort have the price of a movie ticket in their jeans.

National Radio Tie-Up!

Majestic Pictures Corp. has arranged with Octavus Roy Cohen, author of "Back Stage Mystery," which will shortly go into production, to go on the air over a national hook-up with a series of dramatic sketches in conjunction with exploitation of the picture.

JUST LOOK AT WHAT SPITZER KOHEN PUT OVER ON PITTSBURGH

A change of climate often produces startling situations. Take the case of Spitzer "Barnum" Kohen, for instance. Spitzer led a more or less routine life of a showman while located over the Warner-Stanley-Fabian district around Jersey City, 'though from time to time breaking out in exploitation rash which brought him into the public eye. When Harry Kalmine went down to the Pittsburgh zone he took Spitzer along. What happens? Take a look at the accompanying photo and form your own conclusions on the effect of soft coal smoke on the human mind.

Lest an explanation is in order, let us state that the scantily clad young lady standing in the department store window is the result of a tie-up Spitzer, as manager of the Davis Theatre, made with the manager of the lingerie division of the store. A sign alongside states: "If the Lovely Maidens of 'Goona-Goona' Land Wore Brassieries (They Don't) They Would Choose Our 'Ohio Model' Style, Featured by Our Own Miss 'Goona-Goona'. When Miss 'Goona-Goona' Walks Into the Store—Follow Her. Don't Miss Goona-Goona at the Warner-Davis Theatre."

And you can take it from us that that gang outside (there isn't a female in the group) look as through they were ready to follow her. Shame on you, Spitzer; there's one old geezer among 'em who's seventy if he's a day.

But all kidding aside, the stunt certainly made the home town boys sit up and take notice. We are indebted to A. H. Schnitzer, manager of First Division, for the photo. Maybe Spitzer himself will check up with us on what further effects the Pittsburgh climate is having on his fertile mind.

Davidson Lends a Hand!

Dave Davidson, former publicity director of Publix Michigan Theatres, Detroit, recently lent a helping hand to the Norwich Knitting Company, Norwich, N. Y., manufacturers of the well known Mickey Mouse sweat shirts, in the compilation of a press book for a general merchandising plan of the article. He was called upon to do this as the result of the outstanding success he achieved when effecting tie-ups with retailers of the slip-overs in his own city. His selling plan covers every important angle and will without a doubt be of tremendous aid to other showmen working along the same lines.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 165.—(A) Give us your views as to just what it is up to the theatre projectionist to do in the matter of film inspection. (B) In what condition is the projectionist justified in expecting to receive film from the exchange? Is the theatre actually paying to have it delivered in that condition? (C) Just what is or may be the various effects of receiving film in bad mechanical condition? (D) What do you do when film is received in poor mechanical condition? Again I say, no ghost stories! What do you actually do about it, other than put a few dents or near-dents in the third commandment?

Answer to Question No. 158

Bluebook School Question No. 158 was: (A) Name as many as you can of the various ways in which unnecessary damage is inflicted upon film. (B) What is meant by "pulling down." What damage does it cause? (C) Name the various things that tend to inflict damage upon film sprocket holes. (D) Tell us what faults you have found in the packing of films received which tended to damage the films. (E) Tell us, in detail, just how you pick your reels for shipment.

Jumel, G. Deckson and L. Cranlo, J. Ahrenson and G. Lombard and G. G. Breston.

A goodly list, considering the nature of the questions and the many items involved in some of the various sections. I have found no really complete answer to Section A. I have therefore concluded to myself write an answer composed of items taken from various answers. You may compare and see what each of you overlooked:

1. Poorly constructed reels. 2. Reels that have been abused either in the exchange, in shipment or in the projection room. 3. Rewinder elements out of line. 4. Too rapid rewinding. 5. Permitting end of film to flap around when rewinding is completed. 6. Pulling down in rewinding or after it is completed. 7. Unnecessarily dusty air in projection room. 8. Permitting film to come into contact with floor or unclean table top. 9. Lack of proper inspection and repair in exchange. 10. Improper packing for shipment, either at exchange or in theatre. 11. Reels too wide, permitting uneven winding of film with the result that protruding film edges may be smashed by rough handling in shipment. 12. Poorly made splices. 13. Wrongly adjusted sprocket idlers. 14. Undercut or badly worn sprocket teeth. 15. Reels having a too-small hub diameter. 16. Poor film cement, resulting in weak splices with possible serious damage to film. 17. Oil reaching film, no matter from what source. 18. Too much tension at projector aperture. 19. Excessive take-up tension. 20. Change-over signal marks scratched, punched or otherwise. 21. Improperly scraping when making splices. 22. Scratching by deposits on tension shoes or other parts of film track. 23. Worn valve rollers. 24. Guide rollers out of line or binding too much. 25. Cam shaft out of line. 26. Improper tension in upper magazine. 27. Improper storage of film. 28. Too fast framing when using some types of equipment. 29. Improper cleaning of film. 30. Tension shoes roughened by improper cleaning off of deposits, thus inducing further deposits and added damage to film.

(B) Several excellent replies to this one. G. E. Doe says, "Pulling down is the act of holding a reel of film stationary and pulling the outer end of the film thereon so as to cause the various layers of loosely wound film to slip upon each other and thus tighten the roll. Since in the process the film layers must slip upon each other under more or less pressure, scratches will result, especially if (as is always the case) particles of gritty dust are between them. Such scratches fill with dirt and become opaque, whereupon they show up on the screen in the form of what we call rain."

(C) J. Wentworth says, "Excessive tension applied to upper reel or too little tension applied to same. Excessive tension at aperture. Hooked upper or lower or other sprocket teeth. Undercut or badly worn intermittent sprocket teeth. Excessive tension at sound gate. Excessive take-up tension. Deposits on tension shoes. Too-heavy aperture tension is the king bee of them all.

"(D) Very different troubles seem to be met with in various parts of this country and Canada, as follows: Film overlapping edges of reel; result, film crumpled. Holding bands off, permitting film to unwrap during transportation, with result that it is crushed and crumpled between edges of reels and container. Film tightly but unevenly wound, with layers sticking out at sides of roll. Happens especially with old, bent reels or with reels which are too wide. Weight of other reels causes serious damage to the protruding layers. Poor packing, particularly with one-reel cans. If wide reels are forced into tight cans the film is pinched, with disastrous results to its edges, particularly if loosely wound. Film jammed into badly bent film cans."

(E) Dowling says, "I wind films for shipment on the 1,000-foot exchange reels and place bands securely fastened around each reel of film. If any fault exist in any reel I attach notation of same. If films are on circuit rewind, placing OK slip on first reel band, or describing any faults, naming reel they will be found in."

Wayland says concerning sections, "I pack my reels for shipment in the following manner: 1. All broken leads are properly patched on. 2. All patches are properly made. 3. The proper band is on the proper reel. 4. They are not rewound but are shipped backwards. 5. If shipping to another theatre, enclose note relating to condition of print, changeover cues, etc."

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified.
